HENRY PETERSON & Co., Publishers. No. 319 Walnut St., Philad'a.

PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1868.

Price $2.50 A Venr, in Advance. Single Number 5 Cents.

THE COTTAGE HEARTH.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

The ruddy blaze shines clear, Making home faces bright, And happy smiles appear Beaming within the light, And love's pure rays illumine there, Grave brows touched soft with seams of care.

The father's voice strikes deep Upon the listening car, The mother's accents keep A soothing cadence near, And clearer and more sweet than all, The tones of childhood softly fall.

O happy cottage hearth,
Peace is thy fairest gift—
Though clouds may shadow earth,
Here gleams a sunny rift,
A glow where all sweet joys combine,
Seeming half earth and half divine.

THE

DEATH SHADOW OF THE POPLARS.

(CONCLUDED.)

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, BY MRS. MARGARET HOSMER. AUTHOR OF "THE MORRISONS," &c.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

MRS. WALLACE IN TWO CHARACTERS.

Two days after Easter, Mrs. Wallace's carriage drew up once more under the portico at The Poplars, and, veiled and closely muf-fled, the lady alighted and went in. She wished to see Miss Raye, and was shown at wished to see Miss Raye, and was shown at once into the young lady's presence. Leonore was sitting in her little parlor at her writing table, surrounded by quantities of papers and drawings. She rose instantly and stood bowing low before the woman to whom she was more objectionable than any living creature. Mrs. Wallace threw aside her veil and disclosed a face pale with sickness and marked with care and trouble. She ness and marked with care and trouble. She ness and marked with care and trouble. She spoke, and her voice trembled with excitement and feeling. "I have ventured to come to you as a suitor, Miss Raye," she said. "I have no reason to believe that my prayers will be availing, but desperate people clutch at every hope, and I am desperate."

Leonore looked at her with eyes that did not betray her thoughts. She, too, had been sufferer, her counterance betreke hysical

a sufferer; her countenance bespoke physical pain, but gave no clue to her mind. "You must say more before I can understand you," she said quietly, and resting her hand on the back of her chair, she stood looking down on the lady, who had sunk trembling into a seat.

"What I say is forced to be harsh and painful. I wish I knew how to spare you better, but I cannot and express my mean." ing. Miss Raye, the world—society—all who know you, think you a criminal; you are watched this instant, and the time is near when your name will be made public in connection with the most dreadful suspi-My son was the affianced husband of two young ladies whom you are suspected of wronging. Your claiming him by some more than human power and drawing him within the circle of your influence is some-thing horrible to all who know it. Can I not implore you to spare him? It is a frightful doom you condemn him to. Have pity and let me, his mother, drag him back

'I have heard this before and it has killed me," killed me," said Leonore, slowly. "It is terrible, but it will pass away, because it is false; but to ask me to give up the hold I have on life is mean and cruel. Louis is no victim; he loves me, and we are happy in all this terrible agony; he believes me pure and innocent, and nothing can tarnish me now."
"This is folly, romantic folly; the poor boy does not know his own mind; you have thrown a spell over him that he has not the power to resist. Once set him free and he power to resist. Once set him free and he will shudder to look upon the precipice he has been dragged back from."

"I do not understand you-nor can you know the truth of what you speak of. Louis knows it all, and is only more firmly my friend. It was all like a dream. I was per-fectly innocent of all design, and when they brought me back they made me swear that I would be quiet till Jean could get away. What am I saying? Oh, do not come here an I torment me so!"

"Give up my son! You confess that you are concerned in this frightful business, and yet you have not the magnanimity to sink Remember, it is infatuation, which will not last, and you will save him and she entreated her, with such a quiet, change-less eye, that Mrs. Wallace faltered and turned away.

There was not another word spoken; the mother coughed and tried to swallow some nervous impediment in her throat that choked her utterance, but failed. Presently she found it best to rise and move away to

she found it best to rise and move away towards the door, in some confusion, for the steadfast gaze upon her disconcerted all her powers. As she laid her hand upon the fastening, Leenore stepped towards her with gentle dignity and grace.

"The time may come when you will think more kindly of me, madam," she said.
"When it does, remember I have always respected and honored you." She made a slight motion, as if she would have touched her hand, but Mrs. Wallace shrunk away in haste, and covering her face, departed.

haste, and covering her face, departed.
On the portice she met Mr. Bond, flushed with haste and looking much excited. There were two men beside him, who hung back as he went boldly in to where Leonore yet

Mrs. Wallace paused, for she felt the shadows were closing round the young mis-tress of The Poplars, and that the worst was

"What is this?" she heard her say in proud surprise.

Mr. Bond replied. Apparently his energy in the pursuit he had followed so determinedly cooled as soon as he saw his victim run down, for his voice was weak and his manner shame-faced and faltering.

manner shame-faced and faltering.

"Miss Raye, you are in the custody of these persons, and it will be necessary for you to ride to Stapleton with them to answer a few questions which will be asked you there."

"Are you serious, sir? On what grounds am I thus insulted?"

am I thus insulted?"
"To answer the charge of being concerned with a woman named Jane Fry, commonly known as 'Crazy Jean,' in the poisoning of Olivia, Bertha and Adah Copeland."

A cry of horror that somehow smote Mrs.
Wallace's ear strangely and touched her heart rung out upon the air, and then she heard a heavy fall upon the floor. A perfect stillness followed, and though her will moved her towards the carriage, her heart kept her

"You've killed her," said one of the men in a frightened voice to Mr. Bond. "You'd better let us manage these things; we're used to 'em." Something in the jealous mother's heart asserted itself at these words, and try as she could to repress it, it forced her back into the little parlor where the motionless figure lay. If that exquisite face had been carved in marble it could not have been more imin married trecular hot have been more im-movable or deadly cold, yet it was sweetly innocent as if it had been an infant's. One of the strange men raised her in his arms, but Mrs. Wallace caught her from him and took her in her own

"Mr. Bond, have you done wisely, or as a gentleman should? Miss Raye is a lady, and not yet proven unworthy your respect."
"I am doing what I feel to be my duty," said Mr. Bond, but he did not seem to be so sure of it as he was a few moments ago.

turning memory.

Mrs. Wallace spoke; it was a great effort, but she made it, and said, "Miss Raye, these people insist on your accompanying them to Stapleton to answer some serious questions. If your own heart sustains you, trust in God If your own heart sustains you, trust in God and all will be well. I will go with you." These words were uttered with a slow dis-

These words were uttered with a slow distinctness that made each syllable a sentence, and their sounds seemed to restore the stricken girl to sense and reason. She rose up and stood a little dazed, but with a dawning purpose in her eyes which held her terror in abeyance. Mr. Bond moved aside for her to find her hat and mantle, and she came and stood beside the strangers in mute recognition of their power over her. Mrs. Wallace, with a determined effort that changed her whole bearing from a gentle and rather propitiatory matron to a stern, immovable figure, that might have stood for the goddesa of Justice, drew the shuddering girl's arm through her own, and passing in advance of the rest, entered the carriage in which Mr. Bond and his attendants had come. One of the men got in with them, and the other sprang up outside. Mr. Bond had a horse waiting, on which he followed, and Mrs. Wallace's coachman sat staring blankly after the disappearing party.

CHAPTER XXIX BARBARA'S LAST WORDS.

Louis Wallace had been absent in New Make me bless you if you resign him now."

Leonore looked at her steadily. "I could not give him up, because he would not be content to leave me. I have done no ill, mation, about which he had dropped some and therefore fear none. It is useless to hints in a fit of intoxication, made his depospeak further." She closed her lips and sition, and then slipped away from the officers of justice who were keeping watch on sition, and then slipped away from the officers of justice who were keeping watch on him, and was now nowhere to be found. Arriving at his home, he learned that his mother was gone to The Poplars early that morning, and had not yet returned; without waiting for further information, he dashed off, and reaching the Hall found everything in the greatest confusion—the servants clustered together, terrifying themselves by the most dreadful surmises concerning their still absent mistress, and Barbara nowhere to be found. The moment he appeared, Margery ran towards him crying appeared, Margery ran towards him crying

"Oh, Mr. Wallace, please find out what's wrong; somebody told Mollie that Miss Raye was put in prison; and we're just a'most crazy, so we are."

was put in prison; and we're just a'most crazy, so we are."

"Oh, it's all owing to that dreadful crazy Jean," wept Mollie. "Oh, dear, do, Mr. Wallace, go and see what it all means."

The rest of the group added their wailing entreaties, but Louis did not pause to hear them. He asked but one question, "Where was his mother?"

"Geon with their roor, ways, lady, and

"Gone with their poor young lady and one strange men, who had come with Mr. ond. Barbara had watched them, and gone off like a crazy person as soon as she saw them start in the direction of Staple she Thither he went with all the speed it was possible to make. And the distracted household left to themselves, made a dismal heliday of it, and compared recellections on the subject of every probable cause for the trouble that had befallen their mistress.

At last, having talked themselves en-tirely out of further suggestion, Mollie de-clared her mind made up to go to Stapleton and find out for herself what was being done to the sweet young lady, and pledged herself not to return without being able to satisfy them all. Her resolution was much applauded, and losing no time she was soon on her way.

on her way.

It was night-fall when she returned, and the exhausted party in the lower hall had sunk into moody silence, when she appeared to waken them to new interests in the unhappy business.

First of all, it was the biggest shame and the most terrible persecution that ever was a very one would say when got up-and so every one would say when beard it.

Mr. Bond had got together a lot of stories against Miss Leonore, and one of them was that she had run off with Mr. Raye, and killed him on the hill road near Marlville; then he'd made up his mind that she had something to do with the young ladies' death, and he was trying to prove that there was poisons that left no trace, and she'd used one of them.

They had Jean for a witness, and they They had Jean for a witness, and they couldn't make her speak. She said that Mr. Bond had got her into a trap, and that she'd be even with him yet; but he couldn't make her talk against her will—and she had nothing to say. Mollie highly approved of this determination, but was forced to confess that the law was too strong for the valiant meddler woman.

liant peddler woman.

"They are going to make her tell all-she knows. And they won't take bail for Miss Raye, although Mr. Louis and his mother

As they spoke she came amongst them. looking more like a spirit than a living wo man, breathless with exertion, yet white and shivering as if chilled to the heart.

"Don't one of you speak one word against r," she said, in a shrill, loud voice. "She as pure and innocent as an angel in Icaven—as will soon be proven."

Margery had been most anxious to see the ousekeeper, and had thought of innumerable questions to ask her concerning Jean, and what the lawyer had gathered as evi-dence against the poor young lady; but there was something in Barbara's face that discouraged interrogation, and with a few disclaimers against being supposed to be un-faithful to their mistress, they all sunk into

She stood a moment looking irresolutely from one to the other, as if there was something she would say, yet could not find the words, then she turned and went away up-stairs, leaving them looking at each other for an explanation which no one could and a strange work it was she was doing. The old chest behind her door was being emptied of everything it held-and as she drew each article from the secret recess, she looked at it with a strange, yearning gaze, as if she said good-by to sacred relics. There are said to f baby's clothes, and a girl's dress of simple white, made in a by-gone fashion, and trimmed with faded flowers. There were letters in little bundles, and a quantity of long, curling hair, that she looked at with a shiver, then laughed bitterly, and held beside her own gray locks to mark the contrast. All at once she came upon the picture that she had consulted once before, it fell into her lap from a bundle of before, it fell into her lap from a bundle of yellow leaves, discolored with time and faded writing. As she saw the face, so young and handsome, look smilingly into hers, she uttered a sharp cry and sprang upon her feet, as if the eyes had pierced her like a kaife. They were all out now, and she huddled them up into her arms, and looked around her to see that no shred was left be-hind. Then she went out and closed the door, going up-stairs towards the room door, going up-stairs towards the room where so many had died. It was dark, and the awful shadows grouped like ghostly figures in the corners where the faint moonfigures in the corners where the faint moonlight did not reach, filled her with horror, and she quaited before the closed door that had shut upon so much of life and youth forever. It was but a moment's hesitation, and then she unlocked it and went in.

"There is nothing here that I need dread," she said, "the worst is with me alwaya."
She groped her way to the broad fireplace and threw her bundle on the hearth.
Then she made a light, and the dry papers

Then she made a light, and the dry papers blazed up bravely and brightened the gloom around. Barbara threw the infant's clothes around. Barbara threw the infant's clothes upon the flame, and grouned as the fire began to smoulder under the weight of the cotton fabric. The ebony cabinet stood in the recess where Miss Bessard used to write-her recess where Miss Bessard used to write-her letters, and Barbara opened it like one who understood its secrets. From the hidden drawers she took the bottles and the tiny sponges, and threw them in the fire, tegether with the silver saucer, and all the imple-ments she had placed before the poor young ledies the last night of their lives. Then she searched and searched in every crevice of the cabinet with nervous haste, to find some-thing clee belonging to the mystery, and the cabinet with hervous haste, to find some-thing clase belonging to the mystery, and came at last upon a letter fallen down be-hind the smallest drawer, which she opened and read eagerly, laughing at every word in a harsh, discordant way that was painful to hear. The flame had shot up brightly, catch-ing the withered branches of lilacs that had filled a vase which she had overturned from its place beside the hearth. She thrust the its place beside the hearth. She thrust the paper in among the leaves saying—"It would take all biame from me—but I will not shield myself; I would have swept them out of my darling's way; and all I feared was that he would not be worthy of the love she gave him. I would have spared her this blow by yielding up my miserable life, but it could not be, and my child is paying the price of her hunnings.

price of her happiness.

Then she stirred up the fire and threw in all her treasures, hiding the picture in and her treasures, hiding the picture in among the rest, that its features might not mock her. The sparks there is an experience of the sparks mock her. The sparks flew out and caught a delicate fire screen, and made a bright red spot upon its dark surface. Barbara did not every effort to prove that Miss Raye was illegally detained on the accusation of Mr. Bond, since the witnesses produced by that centieman were so unsatisfactory to the law. Richard Connell had not yet been found, and Jean could not be induced to speak. Not one word had the horroratricken girl uttered, and yet Mrs. Wallace's feelings had changed more than she could herself account for. The cry she had uttered at Mr. Bond's first sentence of accusation still rung in her ears, and the shuddering terror the meaning of his words had brought into her young face was not guilt, but horror of the crime of which they charged her. She the crime of which they charged her. She had gone with her to the magistrate's, and stayed beside her while Richard Connell's deposition was read-the other charge could not be substantiated, for Mr. Bond's proofs were not at hand. He had evidently hoped by confronting Miss Raye with hoped by confronting Miss Raye with Jean to bring her to confess, through the rible trial without a shadow on her name," he said; and then he blessed his mother for the woman's heart that brought her to the side of the one whom in her jealous soul she had yowed to separate him from for ever. His hope lay in producing Richard Connell, and he felt confident he was on his track, so she left him in the town, and drove back to Riverbend to give orders to her household and return to Leonore.

and return to Leonore.

"I will remain with her," she had said to her son, and he had caught her hands and covered them with kines in token of his love and gratitude for such service.

her son, and he had caught her hands and covered them with kines in token of his love and gratitude for such service.

So she sat alone, thinking or trying to think, when the door opened, and Barbara came in upon her without a word of announcement or preparation.

"What I come for is past ceremony, so I use none," said the strange woman. "Sit down and listen, for I have no time to lose. I have a long story to be told in a few words, and I must begin with the present and go backwards. Miss Raye and your son love each other, and you must either curse or bless them. I have watched you, and I believe that you will be true to your better self, and make them happy. They are in sorrow now, and a black cloud rests on that innocent lady's name, that I must give my life to wipe away. To understand her story you must listen to mine, and remember if it wearies you, the telling it is like pouring out my life's blood to me. When I was a girl I was secretly betrothed to a man who told me his name was Leonard Dorsett, and that he dared not marry lest be should lose his hope of a fortune. I believed him, and by-and-bye we were secretly united. He was a false villain, as it proved, and I loft my home in shame to be a nameless waif on the earth ever since. I was the mother of a child and almost starving when Jean met me, and knowing my story, befriended me by getting me employment at The Poplars, and taking my child, whom I was forced to leave, that we might both live. She deceived me and told me my darling died, and showed me the grave of a companion in a church-yard near my cld home, telling me my child lay there. This she did for money, which is Jean's god. Miss Beasard had a false lover named Raye, and my child was his grand-daughter. Jean told her this, and she paid her well to take the little one away and selucate it secretly. Twas one of her many whims to wish to feel that she was sole friend and protector of the helploss grandchild of a man she never forgave. You do not know the boud het weed and her. friend and protector of the helpless grand-child of a man she never forgave. You do not know the bond between Jean and her, not know the bond between Jean and her, nor how she came to trust so completely in a wandering peddler. Colonel Raye was a deceiful wretch, and Jean was his victim; she took vengeance in her own hand and shot him, for which she was tried and saved on the grounds of her feigned insanity, which she has kept up ever since as a clook. I told you Jean deceived me, but I found I told you Jean deceived me, but I found her out, and the child I had mourned for with all the little feeling left in my frozen soul, came to live under the roof with me, just before her father's evil fate brought him to Stapleton. He tried to carry off his own daughter, but Jean, who hated him, be-cause he was his father's son, thwartest him. He died because he was too foul to live. have written the story out, and Jean will attest it when I amgone. You are frighten-ed at me-well, I claim no kindred with human love or sympathy, and shall not put Sure of it as he was a few moments ago.

"There is a carriage waiting," suggested one of the men.

Leonore slowly opened her eyes, then shuddering closed them again, and seemed to woo insensibility at the first gleam of relationship to the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's amount of the first gleam of relationship that she can't tell, if she's and the fair track, but hurried buman love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human love or sympathy, and shall not put say to mark the fire track, but hurried human away towards the house at Riverbend.

There Mrs. Wallace sat alone in deepent gloom, her son was still at Stapleton, using every effort to prove that Miss Raye was lillegally detained on the accusation of Mr. Bond, since the witnesses produced by that will not be a stain upon her spotless life. You are the only one that need know the truth."

She taid a folded paper on the table beside Mrs. Wallace and began to move slowly side Mrs. Wallace and began to move slowly away. The astounded woman found her voice and called her back.

"Stay, I cannot understand this, it is too much for me to comprehend, but there is one thing I must know. Those poor sisters— you know how they died—and I have a hor-rible dread upon me when I think of them." them

Earbara stood a moment undecided, then she turned away her face and spoke in a hard, rasping voice, that seemed to struggle against the words it uttered.

"Miss Beseard got some fearful stuff to smooth her face and beautify it. It was deadly poison, and it killed her. She wrote to them about the secret, and confessed that Leonore had listened quietly to the wretch's statement, and when it was concluded rose and said, "It is perfectly true," to the utter distraction of her companion. If it had not hear down stairs again and talk to us about it. She is excited now, and don't feel like bothering with answering questions; but she'll come down by-and-by and tell us all about it, never fear."

This was Mollie's conclusion, but it was the last it was gone, and the lady from whose sight she disance.

2000000

sir. Bond and Mr. Wallace were working with one object, but with far different views, and both were exultant when Richard Connell was caught by indefatigable detectives and brought to Stapleton to face Jean Fry, and make good his statement concerning by the Richard Connell was caught by indefatigable detectives and brought to Stapleton to face Jean Fry, and make good his statement concerning by the Richard Connell was caught by indefatigable detectives and brought to Stapleton to face Jean Fry, and make good his statement concerning by the Richard Connell Conn and make good his statement concerning Miss Raye. A most reluctant witness he proved; and although he admitted that he had confessed to Mr. Bond, who had drawn who had been in the carriage with the unfortunate gentle man he used to serve, on the last night of his life, yet he denied having said he believed her to have shot him. He up the ghe testifying against her. Leonore was totally law, came and stood beside the colin of the unconscious of the deed at the time it happened, and had been led by them to believe saw it lowered into its last resting place, that it was the work of some emissaries of within sound of the purgle of the noisy the uncle of the injured Mrs. Raye. They had extracted an eath of secreey from Miss. Raye as the price of the service they had done her, and she was too ill for many weeks to fully regime its extent. All this form

He had hired himself to an who advertised to restore youth and beauty by a process of enamelling, and he had seen the lady come there and get a preparation in several little vials for the purpose. The drugs his master used s most subtile nature, compounder n with his face in a glass mask, and he I that their application must be of a langerous character, as indeed he over eard his employer assure her. They were ravelling from place to place, and left New fork very soon afterwards, so he could no He left the oreigner a few months later, and would ever have remembered the incident has st Miss Bessard's picture and Mr. Bond's ords recalled it to his mind

It was considered best to detain this ver-It was in the coming of the blackers had discovered and the whole matter had been examined with sera-pulous care, until Leonore Raye was pro-nounced pure and blameless. Four girl, she heard the words with pured lips and glit-tering eyes, and listening, scenned to drick back life and hope once more. And yet she could not speak—the power to utter words on the mather, but shows seed round the firm arm of the woman who had distiked and distributed her in property, but supported and up-held her in trouble. Mrs. Walkace had changed more in the last few days than she could have believed it possible for he room und to alter. It was not he room that the tributed her in trouble with a work of apparent guilt, yet so entirely free from evil thought or deed, it was not the changed more from the highest of the stricken grid, so singularly checongased with a work of apparent guilt, yet so entirely free from evil thought or deed, it was not the change for serms through which they had passed, nor the excitneet of emerging from deep irouble into unabouted light; it was the changed nature of her sen that had cannot easily with infe in his new fortune. Louis, the cheany event the fristerer away of tine and takent, the biller in the business of life, was now a man—ware, extrest and fust, with life in his eve and purpose in his seed—all that she had hoped Civia might make him was more than redirect in what he was, and backing into the beautiful face at her was the said to herself; "thank heaven it has wrought such a bieseed change, and wakened all that is best in him to life and action."

The had reached the road commanding the sweeping eventore.

The little grave by which my heart appear to the grow do not have been but one of the off W. Pitcher, Philadon. Also from T. B. Peterson & Fischt Power, "All for sale by G. W. Pitcher, Philadon. Also from T. B. Peterson & Fischt Power, and "Hunted Down," &c.

The little grave by which my heart has a had the few of the rounded fight. It was the work of apparent guilt, yet one entirely be within the physician, left the fed with a phy and his mather, her hands chaped round the firm arm of the woman who had disliked peared, sat unable from varied emotion to speak or follow

X 40000000

CHAPTER XXX.

THE SMOKE OF THE POPLARS.

pointed towards it. "It is The Poplars," she cried, and shut her eyes, as if the sight showed her the ghosts of all the past that lived beneath that root. Louis did not speak, but he leaned forward and took in all the scene. The great old hall was all affaire.

three si-ters rose and field away forever.
Yes, The Feplars was burnt to ashes. The fire Eurhara had scattered had smouthered in the airless room till it gained a slow, sare footing, and then it burst out and vanquished the grand old homestead, that no being of Miss Bessard's name or race was left to occupy.

Old Paul Berryl, in the fulness of years and the childish weakness of age, had given up the ghost, and Esther, the faithful wo said be believed her to have shot him. He leoked the lawyer in the eye with much impudence, and told him that he knew he was auxious to establish such a belief, and as he was hard up and in great need he had consented to tell him what he knew in case it would not be used against him. He declared that he never meant to injure the young lady, though he could easily see that Mr. Bond's object was to ruin her character. He furthermore insisted that Jean should speak and tell all she knew about it, for she was deeper in the mire than he was in the mud, and had contrived to make more money by it, too, as she always did. mud, and had contrived to make more money by it, too, as she always did.

Jean's lips were scaled till Mrs. Wallace appeared to unclose them, and pale and trembling, laid a folded letter in the examining magistrate's hand.

What it contained was all-sufficient, and Jean certified to the writing, producing some from the same hand. Batbara Dorsett, as she styled herself, therein soleunly avewed herself to be the murderer of Lionel Raye, and called upon Jane Fry to prove that she had seen her fire into the carriage just as the murdered man leaned out to give orders to the driver. She made a consise statement of the scene on the read, and averred that remorse at having allowed the young lady to be deceived urged her to commit the deed. She fully exonerated Jean from any complicity with the crime, and said that they had together conveyed the insensible deed. She fully exonerated Jean Irom any gone to her account, complicity with the crime, and said that they had together conveyed the insensible girl to her home, and the peddler woman, fearing an inquiry, had decumped to avoid testifying against her. Leconer was totally law, came and stood beside the coffin of the unconscious of the deed at the time it happened, and had been led by them to believe saw it lowered into its last resting place, with a very of the careful of the noisy.

done her, and she was too ill for many weeks to fully realize its extent. All this Jean testified to be entirely true, and a warrant was issued against the absconding Barbara, who had cleared every one's name but her own.

Mr. Bond could make no more or less of the story than this, and on his endenvering to drag in some suspicion on the subject of the sudden deaths at The Peplars, founded or some remarks dropped by Richard Connell that he knew more about it than any one weald suspect, the magistrate prevented anything further being said in this case, contending that a new charge must be made, since this one was disposed of.

Then Richard Connell laughed, and said it was nonsense—that Mr. Bond was so eager for criminating evidence, that he would catch at anything. All that he built this last accusation out of was that he, Connell, lessing at a picture of Miss Ressari in Bland's office, had said that the face was familiar to him, and he shouldn't wonder if he could tell semething about her mystered and the solution't wonder if he could tell semething about her mystered and the family at Riverbend went abroad tegether, and the old Poplars lay for months in smouldering ruin, while no rumor came from over the sea of the miss menuticeing ruin, while no rumor came from over the sea of the miss menuticeing ruin, while no rumor came from over the sea of the miss fit to say before the healing light and power of time, so the gloomy old rubbish began to give place to a new and splendid pide saitable to the wealth and taste of the returning heiress. In good time the society of Stapleton and threadout beyan to know that Mr and Mrs. Louis Wash and were now returning to carry out the plans for the benefit of the working people of the neighborhood, commenced by the young mistress of the life and was now and splendid pide saitable to the wealth and taste of the returning heiress. In good to the society of Stapleton and thereabout beyan to know that Mr and Mrs. Louis Wash and were now returning to carry out any one was a benefit

Leonore was a beautiful and toveshee woman; Louis a noble and useful man; and his mother's heart was content and blessed. No-body but they three, ever lines the story of Barbara Berryl. Jean was never seen in that part of the country again affer her dismissal from custody, and there was no one else to tell it.

However upplessant it had been for the lady

However unpleasant it had been for the lady Howeverunpleasant it had been for the lady of Riverbein! to acknowle be to herself that her son's wife owned such parentage, the daily development of beauty and nobility in a nature that only lunguished in the past for want of love and guidance, more than reconcided her to the thought, and she was content to feel that the goal of her son's life was wen at lest, though part of the path thither lay through doubt and herror.

[THE LNB]

MARKE BE.

The brown bads thicken on the trees, Unbound, the free streams sing As March leads forth across the leas

Leaves hollows warm and wet, re many days will sweetly blow The first blue violet.

Dear dower germs, which long have lain Within your wintry tomb, Listening for April's vital rain To call you into bloom

O, push the damp, dead leaves apart, And spread your blossoms o'er The little grave by which my heart

Nortce, -Correspondents should always keep copies of any manuscripts they may send to us, in order to avoid the possibility of loss; as we cannot be responsible for the safe keeping or return of any manuscript.

The Death Shadow of The Poplars. We can supply back sumbers of THE POST

TRYING THE WORLD.

teresting story.

to Jan. 4th, containing the whole of this in-

BY MISS DOUGLAS.

In next week's issue of THE POST, we de ign commencing Miss Douglas's new nove let, written expressly for our columns,

As the author of "In Trust," "Stephen Dane," "Claudia," &c., Miss Douglas has won an enviable reputation, which we trust the publication of this last effort, "Thying THE WORLD." will enhance.

We hope our readers will call the attention of their friends to this new novelet-and also to the fact that THE POST contains weekly a large amount of the most excellent and instructive reading, in addition to its admirable stories.

A MUNEUM IN PHILADELPHIA.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Me. Epiron-The subject of a museum Mr. Entron—The subject of a museum in Philadelphia is exciting some inquiry in the daily press, and I hope you will give the project the benefit of your advice and influence—not as a money-making speculation, but purely an intellectual gratification, a means of instruction as well as for the gratification of the juveniles and the curious of all classes. Such a repository, for scientific and natural objects of interest, as Philadelphia once had in Peale's well remembered museum, never should have been permitted to be broken up. The first blow it received museum, never should have been permitted to be broken up. The first blow it received was in its removal from Independence Hall to the old Areade humbug: the next was in its going into Barnum's hands, to be committed to the flames, at the corner of Chestnut and Seventh streets. The small portion saved was removed to "Barnum's" in New York, to be again tested in the flames a few York, to be again tested in the flames a few years since, and if any escaped that great conflagration, it was only to be utterly annihilated in Barnum's grand display of fireworks this winter. But apart from the humburg of the show shop, we want in Philadelphia a respectable place for the amusement and instruction of young and old, our own citizens, as well as for our country friends and visitors generally. Peale's old museum was in existence for a life time, and no one ever thought of such a thing as "fires and conflagrations." They were perils of Bar-They were perils of Bar conflagrations, num's introduction.

As our public buildings are to be erected upon the more central site of Broad and Market, according to the present programme a good opening is effected for the establish ment of a Museum, in connection with some one of the new edifices, which will soon be come a credit to the city. The Franklin In-stitute has a large collection of scientific ob-jects which are now but little known to the community at large, but which may be made of great service in filling up one department of a Museum. And many individuals have curiosities of various kinds, which would be curiosities of various kinds, which would be useful. A gentleman in Camblen, Mr. L. F. Fisher, recently returned from China, brings with him a large and interesting collection of curiosities, the fruits of several years residence in that remarkable country, which would serve as a nucleus for a Museum, to which additions would speedily be made from all quarters. Let us by all means have a Museum.

[We second the motion of our carrespondent with all our heart—it was a sad day for dent with all our heart—it was a sad day for the children, and for many grown people too, when Peale's Museum was no longer to be seen in Philadelphia,—Ed. Set. Ecc.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Snakes Cannot Live in Ireland. The greatest of all the miracles attributed to St. Patrick is the banishment from Irehand of snakes and poisonous reptiles, and the blessing of the Irish soil, so that none of the serpent tribe could ever again live upon it. Pliny, the naturalist, relates that serit. Pliny, the naturalist, relates that serpents are never found upon the trefoil or shamrock, and that it prevails against the sting of snakes or scorpions. As the shamrock is indigenous to the soil of Ireland, and abounds in every part of the country, this may, in some sort, account for the absence of poisonous reptiles from the Green Isle. It is a fact that snakes will not exist for any length of time in Ireland, although they will not die on touching the soil. A curious circumstance occurred in 1831 for the purpose of testing it. A gentleman, named James Cleland, of Rath-gael, in the county Down, purchased in that year half a county Down, purchased in that year half a dozen harmless English snakes, in Covent Garden Market, London, and brought them home to his domain and set them at liberty.

PHILADELPHIA, SATERDAY, WARCH 28, 1868.

They crawled out of the place and were killed by the country people, who were greatly alarmed at their appearance, and so enraged at Mr. Cleland that he was obliged to retire from the country for a time. One of them was killed at Milecross, about three miles distant from where it was let loose. The parties had no idea that it was a snake, but thought that it was a strange specimen of an eel, and brought it to Dr. Drummond, a distinguished naturalist residing in the neighborhood, who at once pronounced it to be a reptile. The idea of a suake appearing at so short a distance from the burial place of St. Patrick was an actounding occurrence, and excited the wildest speculations. The snakes, when captured and killed, appeared to be in a weakly state, and barely able to crawl, thus showing indications of the near approach of death.

We were standing talking in my office, on a certain street which shall be nameless, but which is not unknown to commercial men, when a collector entered the room and presented a bill for gas.

"Have you examined the metre?" said our friend.

"I have," replied the collector.

"And how much is it?"

"Five dollars and sixty-five cents."

Ah, well," said our friend, with a smile of great enjoyment rippling over his features, "we won't hav it" or great enjoyment ripping over his fea-tures, "we won't pay it."

"You won't?" said the man, in great as-tonishment. "Then, sir, I shall be com-pelled to cut off your gas," evidently ima-gining he had uttered some tremendous

"Do so, by all means," replied our friend, and all the habitues of the office burst into a hearse laugh, to which accompaniment the man went out with an angry look of resolution that was in itself sufficiently ludicrous. Not being in the secret, we asked our friend "What meaneth this laughter and where-

"Most noble," he responded, "you must snow that we use no gas, and that the gas has been turned off for the last two years. Every new collector examines the metre, and charges us five dollars and sixty-five cents, as you witnessed to-day, and gets the same answer." There was again a hearty laugh in which, being now initiated, we Mouldy Substances in Rooms.

It has long been known that the presence of moulds in rooms is highly injurious to human health; under certain conditions of dampness and bad ventilation, it is no unommon thing to see mildew run all over a arge expanse of whitewashed wall or ceiling. If this mould occur in a living room, and it be not destroyed, it frequently brings on a complication of painful symptoms in the human patient, or, in other words, the membranes and tissues of the body are known to offer a fitting habitat for the plant, and it is transferred from the original objects to the human frame. A weak solution of hypo-chlorate of lime has recently been recommended as a destroyer of moulds in rooms and as their growth is both common and rapid in this country in damp and ill-ventilated situations, the remedy is worth a trial

Cacography.

Some of the most distinguished French authors are said to be terribly loose in their Lamartine, for example, spells so much so indeed, that there THE JERUSALEM DELIVERED OF TOUQUATO TASSO. Translated into English Spenserian Verse, with a Life of the Author the Bet English Edition. Illustrated with six fine steel engravings. Published by D.
Appleton & Co., New York; and also for sale by G. W. Pitcher, Philada. This is an excellent edition.

CHEAP EDITIONS.—We have received from
D. Appleton & Co. copies of their cheap editions of Scott's "Kenikworth," "Guy Mannering," and Dickens's "Sketches by Boz.
All for sale by G. W. Pitcher, Philada.

Also from T. B. Peterson & Box., copies of Scott's "Ron Roy" and "Antiquary," and Dickens's "Barnaby Rudge," and "Hunted
Down," &c.

Lift North's "Rod Roy" and "Antiquary," and Dickens's "Barnaby Rudge," and "Hunted
Down," &c.

Lift North's Magazine for April contains its usual variety of interesting articles.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY, for April, Published by Ticknor & Fields, Boston.

who have illustrated their fives in former times by acts of greatness, so considered. To a question as to whom his Joss represented, an intelligent Chinaman replied; "Oh! him velly great man, velly great; him have hundred and fifty children."

12 Minnesota recently had a snow storm so furious and blinding, that it is said that several engineers on the St. Paul and Pacific Ruilroad ran their trains past storming that

Railroad ran their trains past stopping sta-tions without seeing them; and in fact, one engine driver had gone five miles beyond, before he discovered his error. It was impossible at times to see five feet from the possible at times to see five reet from the locomotive.

 The following egricultural question has been propounded to the New York Farmers' Club by R. W. Clay, of Olney, Ill. Is there anything to prevent men from spitting to bacco juice over my stove and thoor? Our neighbors come in squirting and chewing as land or they please.

long as they please.

The late Prof. Farmday kept a recort of his experiments. The last one was numbered 16,511.

A LITERARY CURIOSITY.

Mrs. H. A. Deming, of San Francisco, is said to have occupied a year in hunting up and fitting together the following thirty-eight lines from thirty-eight English poets. The names of the authors are given below:

- LIFE. 1-Why all this toil for triumples of an 2-Life's a short summer-man a flower;
- 3-By turns we catch the vital breath and
- 4-The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh.
- 5—To be is better far than not to be, 6—Though all man's life may seem a tragedy;
- 7-But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb, 8—The bottom is but shallow whence they
- 9-Your fate is but the common fate of all; inmingled joys, here, to no man befall
- 11-Nature to each allots his proper sphere, 12-Fortune makes folly her peculiar care;
- 13-Custom does not often reason overrule,
- 14-And throw a cruel sunshine on a fool
- 15-Live well, how long or short permit to
- heaven; 16-They who forgive most shall be most forgiven
- 17-Sin may be clasped so close we cannot see its face — 18-Vile intercourse where virtue has not place;
- 19-Then keep each passion down however
- dear, 20—Thou pendulum, betwixt a smile and
- 21-Her sensual snares let faithless pleasure
- lay, 22—With craft and skill—to ruin and betray.
- 23-Soar not too high to fall, but stoop to 24—We masters grow of all that we despise.
- 25-0 then renounce that impious self-
- esteem 26-Riches have wings, and grandeur is a dream.
- 27-Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave, 28—The paths of glory lead but to the - grave. 29—What is ambition? 'tis a glorious cheat, 30—Only destructive to the brave and great.
- 31-What's all the gaudy glitter of a crown? 32-The way to bliss lies not on beds of down. 33-How long we live not years, but actions,
- tell; 34—That man lives twice who lives the first life well.
- 35-Make then while yet ye may your God your friend, 36—Whom Christians worship, yet not com-
- 37-The trust that's given guard and to yourself be just; 38-For, live we how we can, yet die we

1 Young, 2 Dr. Johnson, 3 Pope, 4 Prior, 5 Sewell, 6 Spenser, 7 Daniel, 8 Sir Walter Raleigh, 9 Longfellow, 10 Southwell, 11 Congreve, 12 Churchill, 13 Rochester, 14 Armstrong, 15 Milton, 16 Baily, 17 Trench, 18 Somerville, 19 Thompson, 20 Byron, 21 Smollet, 22 Crabbe, 23 Massinger, 24 Cowley, 25 Beattie, 26 Cowper, 27 Sir Walter Davenant, 28 Grey, 29 Willis, 30 Addison, 31 Dryden, 52 Francis Quarles, 33 Watkins, 34 Dryden, 52 Francis Quarles, 53 Watkins, 34 Herrick, 35 William Mason, 36 Hill, 37 Dana,

Co" Gen. Grant's father is now in his seventy-fifth year. Not long ago he proposed to give the principal part of his property to his children; whereupon the General said, "He had done nothing towards making it, and did not want any of it." The old gentleman quietly adds, "The Government had provided for him so well, that acquiesced in his view," Mr. Grant "kept enough for himself," gave his son Orvil the largest share, and his two daughters $25,000 Mr. Grant was accustomed in the King's presence to box the ears of her waiting maid with a saucer. The prudent King thought of his own ears, and hesitated.

rectly from bothly derangements caused by the violation of physical laws, either by the criminals themselves or their ancestors.

Total letter was recently dropped in the post-office at Danver, Colorado, addressed to Mr. Coldfacts, Senator of Congress.

Total Whittemore, post-master at Fluvanna, Chatanqua Co., has held his office ince. Loby Ovigne, blesselvities. since John Quincy Adams's time.

Scotia, last week. A lady on the sidewalk, with great "presence of mind," ran into the middle of the street, was knocked down and billed.

18 Richard Nichols, who successfully navigated a six ton fishing boat from England to Australia, has just lost his life in an attempt to navigate the streets of London. He was knocked down at a street crossing by a cart laden with live pigs, and almost instantly killed.

Building the House.

BY MRS. ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

In New England, the descendants of the possible. Women, even the dullest of them, are acnsitive to external impressions, and their feelings tend to what is bright and cheerful, or the reverse, in proportion as their surroundings present the cheery and beautiful, or the stern and forbidding. I shall not plan a palace for my married pair; for, in our country, only the very vulgar aim at the distinctions of wealth, and I trust my wise and handsome pair are superior to the vanity of fine furniture and expensive attack.

Let the house, if possible, be out of the city, even if you are obliged to make some little sacrifice to have it so; for in the long run, you will find the accounts tell well in your favor on the scere of health, geniality, and expense. No rightly constituted mind can be content without trees, and flowers, and birds, and babbling brooks. One of the and birds, and babbling brooks. One of the finest touches of Shakspeare is in the last hours of the selfish and corrupt, but witty Falstaff, who, after a career which has lit-tle to resleem it, is, I think, too severely abandoned by the Prince, in his age of poverty and neglect, and at length, Nature, more gentle than human creatures, takes Women and children are always happier women and children are always happier for being in the country. I was once greatly pained in talking with a city child, and tell-ing him of the delights of rural objects, when he stopped me midway it my descrip-tion by acking.

ow do little lambs look? Do they look like little mice? Do they sing like Mamma's canary?"

The ideas engendered by a city life are far less wholesome, and less enlarging, than those suggested by Nature in her grand and those suggested by Nature in her grand and beautiful retreats.

A house is not a place for mere shelter; an Indian wigwam, an Irish shanty or Esquimaux hut will suffice for this purpose; into places like these the uncultured man creeps, and the woman, degraded by servility, crawls, and from thence the infant looks out of the low portal, as the wild animal looks from his den—the house of the wise woman and provident man involves more than a supply of mere animal wants. A house is for the habitation of intelligent, cultivated, hospitable beings. It accords A house is for the habitation of intelligent, cultivated, hospitable beings. It accords with the sentiment of the beautiful, and involves fitness and use. It is for more than one. It opens its portal cheerily to the comer, and is suggestive of warmth and comfort. It is to be a home, the dearest place on earth to a pure heart. Children play in the sunshine under great sympathetic trees, which toos their branches in chorus to their mirth; blossoms cluster in the pathway, and vines embrace the lattice; pleasant melodies float outward in concert with the sweet melodies of wood concert with the sweet melodies of wood concert with the sweet meionics or wood and water, and bird and kine; holy hymns and sanctifying prayers ascend as from an altar, rising with the early dew, and softly mingling with the hush that comes with the close of day.

I have seen many a horseshoe nailed upon the beaus of a house, to be a talisman to Close of day.

I have seen many a horseshoe nailed upon the beams of a house, to be a talisman to keep its inmates from harm; and I have seen more than one timid woman sprinkle salt upon the threshold of her new home, to salt upon the threshold of her new home, to salt upon the threshold of her new home, to simple catalogue of comforts.

If our pair who are building the house are not rich, they are all the better for feeling the spur of necessity. God has better determined to the spur of necessity.

an immate; to that divine peace by which all wranglings and bickerings should be done away with, and to those deep monitions, which should testify to the sincerity of our belief in the unscen and eternal. Our houses ould be as hely as our churches, to say the

How shall the house be built? I am not writing for the rich, the luxu-rious or the idle, and therefore I shall hint at a house suitable for a man and woman of moderate means, and here let me say, that they will give themselves no anxiety about a parlor whatever. These parlors, with their useless furniture, and marble mantles, and folding-doors, are a drain upon the purse and a detriment to the morals of a household. Your true friends, who love and respect you, come to see you and enjoy your society, and never think of your furniture.

I think the kitchen need not be very large, but it must have neat closets and drawers, with an abundance of fresh towelling, and be well, for the sake of a certain picturesque be well, for the sake of a certain picturesque state, to raise one side of it slightly after the manner of the ancient dais, and upon this should stand the piano, if you are able to have one; here should be a desk convenient for writing; and here should be books also, and the easy chairs for dignity. This dais might be carpeted, while it is not essential to carpet the rest of the room. If well warned in winter, such a room will be found most delightful. It will keep the household In New England, the descendants of the old Pilgrim stock literally followed the suggestion given by Jesus, that "the wise man buildeth his house upon a rock," impervious to wind and rain; and accordingly their old homesteads were found perched upon barren rocks upon hill sides, where the bleak wintry winds played their melancholy carnival around the huge chimneys. This is a great mistake, for the location of a house should present as few mournful aspects as possible.

To writing; and neve should it is not essential to carpet the rest of the room. If well warmed in winter, such a room will be found most delightful. It will keep the household the enjoyment of home pursuits and simple pleasures. It will obviate expense, and present cach member of a family candidly to the eyes of each other. Its size will give ample opportunity for those little asides required for council and even covered by lovers, quired for council and even coveted by lovers, for a lounge er a sofa here and there will impart to it a cosiness and grace.

It is well to have a long hall run from

The chambers or sleeping rooms of "our The chambers or siceping rooms of the house," should be the sweetest, freshest, airiest portion of it; not crowded with furniture, and I think devoid, in summer at least, of carpets, with nice fresh rugs, placed as comfort and convenience may sugest.

It is a very great pity to uselessly waste It is a very great pity to uselessly waste money, that may be needed for education and beneficence, upon the thousand knick-knacks that infast our modern houses. A good picture here and there, a statuette— Roger's groups, for instance—a choice volume, a bit of harmonizing drapery, a vase, freshly gathered flowers, are beautiful and suggestive, and may be added now and then as the pair grow preservers. but let more gentle than human creatures, takes her miserable child by the hand, and a child once more lays his head upon her bosom, where, dying, he "babbled of green fields."

and suggestive, and may be added now and then as the pair grow prosperous; but let them do so cautiously, from a sentiment of true taste, not from vanity or ostentation, and by no means at the hazard of incurring a debt.

Young people, who go out from an amply furnished house, are apt to think they must live as handsomely as they did at home, and if they can not do this they prefer to board. This is to make a great mistake. Ten to one their own parents commenced life in a step by step to wealth by the practice of the utmost frugality, and by dint of steady, honest labor. It is to be hoped this was the case, for it is the best criterion of good case, for it is the best criterion of good parentage.

Now our young people ought to be willing to begin life in a simple, moderate way, and rise gradually to the status of their progenitors, if desired, though I think the less they encumber themselves with superfluous luxuries the happier they will be. It is fatal to board. It is expensive and cheerless, and is not home. Resolve to build your bound. is not home. Resolve to build your house if it be ever so small. You can add room to room as occasion requires, and you will find yourself happier, more independent, and more respected as a householder than as a honder.

and more respected as a householder than as a boarder.

I think one of the first rooms which our married pair will add is the "guest room" or "Prophets chamber." That is a fine pic-ture of old-time simplicity and hospitality, that story of the Shunamite recorded in Holy writ. She, the woman, was said to be a creat woman; nothing especial is said of a great woman; nothing especial is said of the husband, but the picture of the wife is perfect in its sweetness and simplicity. She seems to be an advocate for equality, as every wifely woman is; she does not say

"Let me," or "I will," etc., but with a cordial bright-eyed tenderness, she says:
"Let us, I pray Thee, make a little chamber on the wall for this man of God; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a salt upon the threshold of her new home, to be an omen of good; and I, for one, would sooner believe in and yield to these harmless superstitions, than keep house in the cold, material, ungodly way so prevalent in our country. We Christians are less reverent than the Pagans, who instituctively acknowledge the sanctity of home by the worship of the Lares and Penates, whose only worship consisted in the toss of a few crumbs of bread, or wine, or water, as a token of faith in benign and invisible powers.

A cordial good will, a peace-loving spirit, neighborly offices, and human charities seem to me so essential to a household, that I neighborly offices, and human charities seem to me so essential to a household, that I would even restore the salt to its ancient symbolism, and he who had shared my hospitality, partaken of my bread and meat, should for ever afterward be entitled to my good will; should be sacred from abuse, evil speaking, or malevolent design.

We dedicate our churches—I would dedicate our houses, also, with religious ceremonial—dedicate them to that hospitality that centertains "angels unawares;" to that good faith by which no evil tongue should follow an inmate; to that divine peace by which all wranglings and bickerings should be done fine his views in He, and each will have not only wise, but will find it the natural instinct, to say each to each, as did the Shunamite, "Let us, I pray Thee," do thus and thus.—Herald of Health.

> 13" Here is an example of military availability: During the war in India, the na-tive princes were so hard run for ammunition that they had to use their prisoners for projectiles. The mortars on one battery were fed entirely with line officers, and with such effect that a breach in one of the English strongholds was made by throwing four Colonels and three Brigade Inspectors against it. The line officers were preferred because they had thicker heads than those who filled inferior positions. This is not only the ease with the English army, but with others.

13" William Howitt, now seventy-three years of age, says he owes his longevity and health to four doctors—Temperance, Exer-

with an abundance of fresh towelling, and strong, useful articles for cooking; not too many conveniences, which take up time and strength to little purpose. There should be a sliding door, though a pantry, perhaps, by which the food can be handed without noise of delay into the dining-room.

The dining-room should be large and airy, without cross lights, but with light in plenty. Here should be the central spot of the house-the folds are of black satin, the headband, composed of jet-beads, has the shape of a which the food can be handed without noise or delay into the dining-room.

The dining-room should be large and airy, without cross lights, but with light in plenty. Here should be the central spot of the household. Here should concentrate all its geniality, all its cheery talk, all its mirth, its intelligence and hospitality. I think it would

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CONGRESS. - In the United States Senate, on the 17th, Mr. Edmunds, of Vt., read a resolution of the Retrenchment Committee, declaring that the recent report on whiskey frauds, though made by one of the committrauds, though made by one of the commit-tee, was made on his own responsibility, and not authorized by the committee, the sub-ject never having been referred to them. In the House, the bill removing political disabilities from certain ex-rebels was con-sidered and recommitted. The bill to admit Alabama was considered, and finally Mr. Stevens, of Penna., saying that he was not satisfied to force a vote upon it in view of

Stevens, of Penna, saying that he was not satisfied to force a vote upon it in view of the election returns in that state, moved its recommittal, which was agreed to.

In the Senate, on the 18th, a communication was received from Gen. Grant, enclosing a telegram from Gen. Meade, saying that the execution of the bill directing military commanders to fill offices with those who can take the test oath would be impractary commanders to fill offices with those who can take the test oath would be impracticable. The bill removing the tax on manufactures was considered, passed in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate. In the House, Mr. Broomall, of Pa., moved to reconsider the vote referring to the Judiciary Committee a bill introduced by him in the last giving the suffrage to prevent in ciary Committee a bill introduced by him in July last, giving the suffrage to negroes in all the states of the Union. The bill was supported by Messra. Broomall, Schofield, Williams, Kelley and Stevens, of Pa., and opposed by Messrs. Woodward, Royer and Lawrence, of Pa., and by Mr. Kerr, of Ind., and Mr. Spalding, of Ohio. Mr. Spalding favored negro suffrage as a state measure, but opposed the bill as a direct violation of the Constitution. Mr. Stevens offered a substitute for the bill, but Mr. Broomall withdrew his motion, leaving the matter still in committee. Mr. Farnaworth, of Ill., from the Reconstruction Committee, reported another bill to admit Alabama.

On the 19th, the Senate passed the House bill to exempt manufactures from taxation, bill to exempt manufactures from taxation, with amendments providing for a reduction of the tax on petroleum to 50 cents, and fixing the tax on receipts from manufacturers at two dollars for each thousand dollars over ten thousand. The amendments re-over ten thousand. The amendments re-ported by the committee to still tax sugar, spices, coffee, &c., were rejected.

In the House, Mr. Boutwell, of Mass., from the Judiciary Committee, reported the bill providing that in case of the inability of the Chief Justice to perform his duties they shall devolve on the Senior Associate Jus-tice, and it was presed. The bill to continue shall devolve on the Senior Associate Jus-tice, and it was passed. The bill to continue the Freedmen's Bureau another year was passed—yeas 96, nays 37.

New Jensey.—The Republican Conven-tion met at Trenton and chose delegates to the Chicago Convention. The resolutions adopted approved of Gen. Grant for Presi-dent, and endorse Concress, but are silent dent, and endorse Congress, but are silent concerning the finances.

MICHIGAN.—The Michigan Republican Convention met at Detroit, and chose delegates to the Presidential Convention. Resolutions were adopted favoring universal suf-frage, and declaring for Gen. Grant and Schuyler Colfax as next President and Vice resident, VIRGINIA.—The new registration in Rich-tond, Va., closed on the 14th inst., giving the blacks 38 majority out of 12,000 regis-

The Virginia Convention has adopted a section of the franchise article requiring all state officers to take an oath accepting the civil and political equality of all men before

The Virginia Convention has decided to vy a tax of three per cent. for the payment of its expenses, NORTH CAROLINA,—Hon, Thos, S, Ashe has accepted the Conservative nomination for Governor of North Carolina. The Con-vention has adjourned. ARKANSAS.—The election returns from Arkansas are meagre. The opponents of the Constitution claim that it will be defeated by at least 15,000. Menroe and Phillip coun-ties are reported to have voted in favor of the Constitution.

CALIFORNIA.—The State Assembly has rejected the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution by a vote of 46 to 24. ALASKA.—Alaska has been made a separate military department, and Gen. Jeff. C. Davis has been assigned to its command.
AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL LAW.—The United States Supreme Court has declared un-constitutional the law of Nevada, levying a tax of one dollar on every person leaving Brooke delivered an oration at National bodily labor Guards' Hall.

Rock River Valley, in Wisconsin and Illinois, come reports of great gorges of ice, the de-struction of bridges and the inundation of villages. Many of the railroads in the in-terior of Illinois have been severely damaged by the heavy rains. The bridge of the Illinois Central Railroad over the Rock River was partially carried away, although the track was forty-five feet above high water mark. On the Chicago and North-western Railway the track for nearly a mile was at one time submerged to a depth of three Floods and floating ice have obstructed railway travel over the Hudson, Susque-hanna and other rivers, temporarily. Extensive land slides have occurred on the Pan Handle and Pittsburg and Connellsville Railroads, causing much damage and obstructing travel. RECALLED.—The resignation of Cassius M. Clay, Minister to Russia, has been accepted. Mr. Clay is on his way back to this country. He was requested to resign by Mr. Seward owing to certain charges brought against him.

Maine.—The City Council of Portland, Maine, has chosen Jacob McLelland, Republican, Mayor of that city—no choice having been made in two previous elections by the santry were lacking in enterprise, but should Senator Wade on Public Economy and encouraged by the government. He ought the Ministry should have no time in announcing some definite and safe plan of progressive reform. On the 19th, Earl Mayo, Chief Secretary for Ireland, presented the Government bill for reform in the repre-sentation of Ireland in the Commons. There and rumors, and is extensively commented on by the press, but the object of his mission has not been divulged. His reception every-where in Germany has been most cordial.

ITALY. - Despatches received from Rome announce that Lucien Bonaparte, Gonella, Barelli, Brardi, Moses, Borromeo and Ca-potti have been made Cardinals.

Pope Pius has proclaimed the new Roman Catholic Bishops of Erie, Louisville and Buf-The French troops in Rome have been reduced to a single brigade.

The cruption of Mount Vesuvius is increasing in power and grandeur. The volcano is throwing up vast quantities of fire, with but little lava. The detonations are with but little lava. The detonations are very loud and frequent.

ABYSSINIA.—It was reported that General Napier was about to make a sudden dash upon the enemy's forces near Magdala, in the hope of being able to free the captives in the surprise and confusion of the moment.

THE WEST INDUS.—At St. Thomas the cholera is unabated, and the victims number thirty ner day and are laying within four thirty per day, and are buried within four hours from decease. Rain is much needed on the island. AUSTRIA.—In the Reichsrath the an-

AUSTRIA.—In the Reichstath the announcement has been made by the Ministry that the project for the authorization of civil marriages ought to pass in spite of the Concordat. While they regretted the ill-will of the Pope, the Ministry considered such an enactment indispensable to the well-being of society, and should press its adoption by the Reichstath.

ALGERIA.—From Algeria deplorable accounts continue to reach Paris of the suf-

ALGERIA.—From Algeria deplorable ac-counts continue to reach Paris of the suf-ferings of the inhabitants, who are dying by thousands of famine. In Algeria the harvests last year almost totally failed, owing to two years of unexampled drought, and an invasion of locusts unparalleled since the settlement of the French colony there.

A parallel to Mr. Dickens's account of the den of thieves, in "Oliver Twist," has been found in New York city, where the police recently broke up a gang of thieves, con-sisting of two men, two women and nine boys, who had their meeting place in Crosby *treet. Here the leader, named Frank Oli ver, marshalled his followers every mornin; and assigned them each a district in which to ply their vocation. Each morning the newspapers were read to ascertain if any large meetings were to be held, and if so, a special force was despatched to the place. The plunder, consisting of jewelry and every kind of wearing apparel, was handed over to Oliver, who paid a certain per cent to the operators for their services. The organiza-tion, it seems, was still in its infancy, having been going on for a little more than a month. The stolen goods found amounted in value inquiry, have arrived at the conclusion that the power of the entire man, his vitality, is as much expended by two hours of deep mental efforts as by a whole day of ordinary

The Boston and Albany Railroad Company, it is announced, is about to substitute candles and lard oil in the place of kerosene for illuminating their cars. In case of accident, the dangers of petroleum ex-plosion will thus be avoided.

(W At a large party the other evening, while a young lady was playing the plane with peculiar touch, a bystander remarked: "I'd give the world for her fingers." He was greatly taken aback by her prompt re-ply, that he might have her whole hand-for his own. But then it's leap year, you (Anger is a waste of vitality, it is always foolish, and always disgraceful, ex-cept in some very rare cases, when it is kin-dled by seeing wrong done to another, and even that noble rage seldom mends the Leopold de Meyer wears exception ally large and shocking bad hats, and when he lost one in Connecticut, in despair at pro curing another of the proper size, his mana ger telegraphed back to have the missing article forwarded. The answer came as follows: "Down express train met hat lying on the track two miles east of New Haven Mistook it for the depot, and ran right in.

Engineer discovered error and backed out.
Freight train despatched to remove the establishment, and shall forward it in sections as requested.

The Hon. David Wilmot, widely been made in two previous elections by the people.

Foreign Intelligence.

Great Britain.—In Parliament, on the night of the 16th, Mr. Gregory made a speech advocating a reform in Ireland. Mr. Gladstone followed, stating that the Irish pears of the sonly 1,100 John Smiths.

Heduced Trantion.

Senator Wale is reported as follows by the correspondent of the Cincinnati Com-mouncing some definite and safe plan of progressive reform. On the 19th, Earl Mayo, Chief Secretary for Ireland, presented the Government bill for reform in the representation of Ireland in the Commons. There is to be no alteration in the county franchise, but in boroughs the right of voting is to be given to all 25 householders. No action was taken upon the measure.

IRELAND.—The jury in the case of Capt. Mackey have brought in a verdict of guilty of treason. Sentence deferred.

France.—The Corps Legislatif has adopted an amendment to the law on public meetings. It proposes to remove all restrictions from the right of the people to meet in public eassemblies when and where they please.

A French pamphlet, seeking to establish the claims of the Napoleonic dynasty to popular origin, is announced. The authorship is ascribed by some to the Emperor. The writer, after giving a lengthy history of the early popular votes on France, proves from them that the French constitution is based on the will of the people only, and changeable only by a vote of the people. He then passes on to review the course of the Emperor towards the people, and contends that in the decrees of 1800 and 1867 certain liberal reforms guaranteed by the Emperor manifest that he seeks to adopt the covenant to progress and liberty.

Pitessia.—Prince Napoleon, after a series of flattering entertainments given here in his honor, has departed for Paris. His visit to Germany has given rise to many surmises and rumors, and is extensively commented on by the press, but stee object of his mission has not been divulged. His reception every where in Germany has given rise to many surmises and rumors, and is extensively commented on by the press, but the object of his mission has not been divulged. His reception every where in Germany has given rise to many surmises and rumors, and is extensively commented on by the press, but the object of his mission has not been divulged. His reception every where in Germany has given mission has not been divulged. His rec some of my constituents have to pay their taxes, to whom no neighbor would even lend twenty dollars, with the remotest idea of getting it paid this side of the judgment day."

The present year is said to be one for the re-appearance of the seventeen-year lo-custs. The Observer, published at Centre-ville, Maryland, states that these locusts made their first recorded appearance in Maryland in 1799, and returned every seven-teen years after that time, their last appear-ance being in 1851. The Maryland rule will probably apply in this locality.

Dr. Radway's Pills (Conted) Are Infallible as a Purgative and Purifier of the Blood.

Bile in the Stomach can be suddenly eliminated by one dose of the Pills—say from four to six in number. When the Liver is in a torpid state, when species of acrid matter from the blood or a serous fluid should be overcome, nothing can be better than Radway's Regulating Pills. They give no unpleasant or unexpected shock to any portion of the system; they purge easily, are mild in operation, and, when taken, are perfectly tasteless, being elegantly coated with gum. They contain nothing but purely vegetable properties, and are considered by high authority the best and finest purgative known. They are recommended for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Nervous Diseases, Indigestion, Dyspeptia, Bilion-ness, Bilions Fever, Inflammation of the Bowels, Piles, and symptoms resulting from Disorders of the Digestive Organs Price, 25 cts. per box. Sold by Druggists marl6-cow-tf

ONE OUNCE OF GOLD will be given for every our of adulteration found in "B. T. Babbitt's Lion Cot-ce," This Coffee is roasted, ground and scaled hermetically," under letters patent from the United States Government. All the "Aroms" is saved, and the Coffee presents a rich, glossy appearance. Every family should use it, as it is fifteen to twenty per cent. stronger than other pure "Coffee." One can in every twenty contains a One Dollar Greenback. For sale everywhere. Henry C. Kellogg, Agent at Philadelphia. feb23-ly

"Knowlenge is rowen," and to know that in Dr. Tensen," The Dottorenett of Universal. Nechalita Pill you have an invaluable reasedy against Neuraleia, Nerve-ache and all complaints of the nerves, must be consoling to those so afflicted. The effect of this medicine on the nerve fulf is beyond conception. Apothecaries have it. Principal Depot 120 Treamed 81. Button, Mass. Price $1 per package; by mail, two postage stamps extra.

Johnston, followay & Cowden, Agents. Philadelphia, Pa.

Holloway's Phis. Let no sufferer from chronic yapopsia or liver disease despair; this remedy self-nevitably perform the task the dector has abandon-d, and restore the patient to health. Manufactory, 9 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

Fon Colds, Congles, Bronchitis, and all affections of the Lange, take AVER'S CHERRY PECTORAL chich is sure to cure them.

MARRIAGES.

Marriage notices must always by a responsible name.

On Thursday, March 19th, Issu, by the Rev. Dr. Malcom, Cuantas J. Ezerato Miss. Many A., daughter of Geo. Sunger, Esq., all of Philodelphia.
On the 19th Instant, by the Rev. Andr. Manchip, Mr. Pisanson S. Curue to Size Assatta E. Wastrath, but of this city.
On the 19th Instant, by the Rev. J. H. Peters, Mr. Jours H. Cavaracta, to Miss Edwa E. Shisana, daughter of the late Clobs, Shisler, Esq., both of this city.

Gaughter of the size Class, Shaker, Essign, both of this city.

On the fifth instant, by the Hey, Those, C. Musphy, Mr. Thomas Marrier to Miss Julia M. Chamming, of Canden.

On the 11th instant, by the Bey, John Thompson, Mr. William H. Moone to Miss Kaye Shaker and On the 28th of Sept. bast, by the Hey, E. B. Miller, Mr. Honario Mourney to Miss Essia Hankown, both of this city.

DEATHS.

ter Notices of Deaths must always be accompa-

On the 17th instant, Mrs. MARGARET LEHER, In her On the 17th instant, Honarro G. CHASE, in his Call On the 17th instant, CATHARINE, wife of Heavy ullagher, aged 71 years.
On the 16th instant, William Bevays, aged 22 On the 13th instant, William Famous, in his loth On the 17th in-tant, SARAH ANN, Mile of Jos. M. Jones, in her left year.
On the Intellectant, Mrs. Many Thompson, in her the year.
On the left instant, Electanery C., wife of Win.
P. Thompson, in her left year.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

NEUTRAL IN POLITICS.

Splendid Inducements for 1868.

The contents of THE POST shall consist as here before of the very best original and selected matter.
We commenced in the first number of Jamesy, a deeply interesting story, called

THE DEATH SHADOW OF THE POPLARS, by Mrs. Margaret Hoemer, author of "The Morrisons," &c. We shall follow Mrs. Hoemer's story with

TRYING THE WORLD, by Miss Amends "In Trust," "Claudia," &c. Donglas, author of ST. GEORGE AND THE DRAGON, Blizabeth Prescut, author of "How ber Way," "A Dead Man's Rule," Ac.

Beeides our original stories, we give The GEMS OF THE ENGLISH MAGA ZINES, and also the NEWS OF THE WEEK AGRICULTURAL ARTICLES, WIT AND HUMOR, RIDDLES, THE MARKETS, &c., &c.

PRESIDENTS. Various Premiume, from Penells A dirge for the brave old pioneer! to Sewing Machines, including Books, and Silver Plated ware, are given to those getting up Fremium Lists. A list of articles, terms, &c., will be sent to any one desirous of getting up a Fremium List upon spplication by letter, inclosing a postage stamp.
The NEWING HACHINE Fremium. For
Upon its boundless plains.

30 subscribers at $2.50 spices—or for 20 subscribers and $60—we will send Wheeler & Wilson's No. 1 Machine, price $15. By remitting the difference of price in cach, any higher priced machine will be sent.

Every aubscriber in a Premium list, inasmuch as he pays $2.50, will get the large Premium Steel Engraving of "Washington at Mount Vernon," or "One The bloody strife he waged, of Life's Happy Hours," or "Everett in his Libeary,"

Our PREMIUM ENGRAVINGS. For our Premium Engraving this year we shall give the splendid portrait of Washington, engraved from the celebrated picture by Thomas Hicks, N. A. This is And kept his birchen house. sensited picture by the Mount Vernon in the background, and is thirty inches long by twenty-one inches wide. No American home should be without a portrait of "The Father of his Country." This engraving, or one of "Edward Everett in his Liberry," or one of last year's premiums, "One of A dirge for the brave old pioneer! Life's Happy Hours," if preferred, will be sent gratis as a Premium (postage paid) to every full ($2.50) subscriber, and also to every person sending a club! It will not be sent to clab subscribers, utiless they

TERMS. Our terms are the same as those of that well known magazine, THE LADY'S FRIEND luurder that the clubs, and the Fremium lists, may A dirge for the brave old pioneer be made up of the paper and magazine conjuintly when so desired—and are as follows; One copy (and the large Premium Engraving) $2.50.

send one dollar extra.

CLUBS. Two copies, $1; Four copies, $6; Five (and one gratis) $81 Eight copies (and one gratis) $121 Twenty (and one gratis) $28. One copy of THE POST and one of THE LADY'S FRIEND, 84.

Every person getting up either of the above clubs, till receive the Premium Engraving in addition.

(er Subscribers in British North America must sit firenty reals extra as we have to prepay the U. S. postage.

THE OLD PIONEER.

BY THEODORE O'HARA, OF KENTUCKY.

dirge for the brave old pioneer ! Knight-errand of the wood! Calmly beneath the green sod here, He rests from field and flood; The war whoop and the panther's screams
No more his soul shall rouse,
For well the aged hunter dreams

Beside his good old spouse A dirge for the brave old pioneer!
Hushed now his ritle's peal—
The dews of many a vanished year
Are on his rusted steel;

His horn and pouch lie mouldering
Upon the cabin door—
The elk rosts by the salted spring,

Nor flees the flerce wild boar A diree for the brave old pioncer ! Old Druid of the West! His offering was the fleet wild deer, His shrine the mountain's crest. Within his wildwood temple's space

An empire's towers nod, here erst, alone of all his race. He knelt to nature's God.

winds that roam Upon its boundless plains

A dirge for the brave old pioneer ! The muffled drum resound warrior is slumb'ring here Beneath his battle-ground emost where'er the deadly fray Of savage combat raged.

A dirge for the brave old pioneer! ow soundly by her chieftain may The brave old dame sleep on,

The wolf's dread howl is gon His pilgrimage is done; He hunts no more the grizzly bear

The red man's step is far away,

About the setting sun. Weary at last of chase and life He laid him here to rest. Nor recka he now what sport or strife Would tempt him further West.

The patriarch of his tribe! He sleeps, no pompous pile marks where, No lines his deeds describe. They raised no stone above him here, Nor carved his deathless nam. An Empire is his sepulchre,

His epitaph is Fame!

A Game of Chess.

Napoleon had landed at Frejus, in 1815, New parts of the control of the Parts bull to wash of the Parts, but the under twa made of the Parts, but the parts of the twa made of the Parts, but the under twa twa made of the Parts, but the under twa twa made of the Parts, but the under twa made of the Parts, but t having successfully escaped from his quasi-prison at the island at Elba. At first not much matter was made of it at Paris, but the walking on the street, William told him that Rothschild had given leave of absence to most all of the clerks, as there was nothing in the world for them to do; he enlarged upon his grief, that even his chance of playing a game of chess with his friend would now be gone, and, at last, as if hit by the thought for the first time, he remarked, how interesting it would be if he could accompany the attache for a few miles out of town and play him a game in the carriage on the rotat, just for the eddity of the thing. The attache would not have been an Englishman if anything odd, out of the common course of things, should not have pleased him. The arrangement was at once made that William should meet the attache at a certain corner.

should meet the attache at a certain corner by a designated hour that evening, take a seat in the carriage and play a game. Wil-liam immediately returned to the banking-house and told James Rothachild of his suchouse and told James Rothschild of his suc-cess. He received a short note written in cypher; precise verbal instructions where and how to proceed upon arriving at Lon-don; was provided with an abundance of money, and told to leave no means untried to accomplish his purpose. The young man then purchased a board and chessmen such as mariners use at sea, and proceeded to the designated corner, where he had not long to wait. The attache's carriage, drawn by four swift post-horses, drove up, halted but a minute, William got in, and off they started. At the gate, when the sentinel noticed the British Minister's carriage, and the special passport for bearers of despatches, he made no further inquiry, and a moment later the passport for bearers of despatches, he made no further inquiry, and a moment later the two friends had left Paris behind them, and by the aid of a lantern were arranging the chesamen for this extraordinary game. During the game, it was agreed that William the same of th by the aid of a lantern were arranging the chesamen for this extraordinary game. During the game, it was agreed that William should accompany the attache all the way to Calais, where they would part and from whence the British d'plomat could sail to Dover in a boat, always in readiness for a messenger of his minister. Thus they sped on, talking and playing and occasionally sleeping. And the Englishman failed to notice that during one of his sleepy moments the wily William had quietly taken the passport and slipped it into his own pocket. They were yet some miles from Calais, and taking a hasty meal at an inn while changing horses, William succeeded by a heavy bribe, and some plausible story, in winning the most film the midst of a dense forest and on a very bad part of the road, the coach, by the merest accident as it seemed, rolled into a hole and broke an axle. William was ready to be the best was a last or the sail of the horologist's art. We know that this is in no way dependent on the scale upon which clocks or watches may be constructed. postition to his plan. An hour or so later, being in the midst of a deuse forest and on a very bad part of the road, the coach, by the merest accident as it seemed, rolled into a hole and broke an axle. William was ready to help; he would take one of the horses and ride at the top of his speed into Calais and send another carriage, while the attache and the driver might remain and wait. The proposal was innocently accepted and Wilham rode off. Arrived at Calais, he hurried to the quai, found the boat in waiting, produced his passport, was taken on board and the boat immediately sailed with the pretended bearer of dispatches. From Dover he posted as fast as horses could carry him to London, where he arrived about midnight and proceeded at once to the house of Nathan Rothschild, who had already retired for the rolled to the quaice of the problem astronomes the rolled to the quaice.

It may not be amiss to point out briefly what is the nature of the problem astronomes the nature of the problem astronomes the rolled that the true quality of that exactness which is sought after by astronomes. It resembles in a sert the accuracy of the horologist's art. We know that this is in no way dependent on the scale upon which clocks or watches may be constructed. The great hands which sweep over the dialplate of a cathedral clock, and the delicate of a pocket chromometer, are quality well adapted to indicate the flight of time. And, in like manner, the scale of a pocket chromometer are quality of the horologist's art. We know that this is in no way dependent on the scale upon which clocks or watches may be constructed. The great hands which sweep over the dialplate of a cathedral clock, and the delicate of a pocket chromometer, are quality well adapted to indicate the flight of time. And, in like manner, the scale of a cathedral clock, and the delicate of a cathedral clock, and the delicate of a pocket chromometer, are quality well adapted to indicate the flight of time. And, in like manner, the scale of a cathedral clock, an than Rothschild, who had already retired for the night. William desired to be taken im-mediately before the banker, but the ser-vants at first declined, saying that no one was allowed to disturb the rest of their maswas allowed to disturb the rest of their mas-ter. When, however, William insisted that he was just from Paris on a most important mission from James Rothschild, they be-lieved it an extraordinary occasion and one of them went up stairs to wake him. Na-than, on being told the cause of the distur-bance, ordered the young man to be brought to his bedside. William entered and handed bin the owner. Nathan bedself it over and themselves to reat almost as comfortably as at home. By a simple process the divans are made into beds and supplied with publows by the officious guard.

In the first class the carriages are also provided with second stories, so to say, reached by an elegant starcase and fitted with complete beds; in the second, if there are too many passengers to be accommodated on the divans, part of them are longed in the second stories, so the says are the supposed impulence of his young clerk. "It is this much, sir," replied William that I am placed in circumstances which might make it possible for me to go, if you could bring yourself to trust me." the direa, part of them are larged as the master place of the race provided in largeand for hash and caps.

All length every one is singly ensourced, the ordinary good wishes are exchanged and its high time dearer. The guard and the driven only keep awase.

During the twenty hours a passenger is whited along between St. Petersburg and works and hose with the facing sound between the last.

The stations are elegant buildings, painted red, with broad, white facings round the exers. Without, the every between the last of the Ritich place of th course, Napoleon wanted none of it, and finding it true that the banker had no money, James Rothschild was not further molested Materico, on the 18th of June, 1815, finished Napoleon's European career and restored Louis XVIII. a second time to the throne of the Bourbons. Then Nathan's advice and James's prompt action brought golden harvests. They did not forget young William. As late as 1860 this enterprising and daring presence was still living a wealthy banker messenger was still living, a wealthy banker at Hamburgh and the agent of the Rothschilds.-Public Spirit.

Distance of the Sun.

FROM THE LONDON SPECTATOR.

Imagine a prisoner confined within a room which has a single circular window, only six inches in diameter. Suppose him to be pro-vided with accurate instruments, and conceive that directly in front of the window, ceive that directly in tront of the window, and somewhat more than a nile off, there is an object—say a steeple—whose distance he wishes to determine. Then a moment's consideration will show that whatever the accuracy of his instruments, and whatever his skill m using them, yet, with his base line of only six inches, he could not expect an error of less than at least half a mile in his result.

by any means obtained a certain knowledge of the relative distances of the steeple and of these objects, it is clear his power over his problem would be greatly increased. Let the reader look from opposite sides of a window at objects unequally distant but nearly in 1874 and 1882 these results may be improved upon. Yet, even now, we mấy note as a great achievement of modern science the following series of values, differing little (proportionately) among themselves, though well separated from the old determination, 15,274,000 miles:—The German astronomer Hansen, making use of a peculiarity in the moon's motion as a guide, was led to the value 91,700,000 miles: Stone, of the Greenwich Observatory, was led by the same means (only the peculiarity was estimated by other instruments, to the value 92,400,000 miles. Winnecke and Stone, from observations of Mars, obtained, respectively, the values 91,300,000 miles and 91,500,000 miles. Estimates founded on a comparrison of the velocity of light as determined by the miles. Estimates founded on the control by the of the velocity of light as determined by the experiments of Fizeau and Foucault with the experiments of Fizeau and Foucaut with the astronomical determination, give a value of 91.500,000 miles. A method employed by Leverrier, and founded on a peculiarity of the earth's motion, gives 91,600,000 miles. And lastly, the new estimate obtained by Mr. Simon Newcombe (U. S.,) founded on observations of Marx in 1862 make the sun's observations of Mars in 1862, make the sun's distance 92,400,000 miles. The mean of these values is 91,771,000 miles, or nearly 620,000 miles less than the greatest esti-The mean of

From the above results it will be seen that astronomers over-estimated the accuracy of their calculations, when they expressed the sun's distance as if it were known correctly within a thousand miles. But we may justly wonder at the results re corded. Returning to our illustrative prisoner, it is as if his estimates of the steeple's distance differed from their mean by less than fourteen yards.

The Galley-Slaves of France.

The Galley-Slaves of France.
The traveller who visits for the first time the city of Toulon, in France, and leaves the dull streets to watch on the quay the busy harber, is often startled by the sight of a strange-looking vessel which lies at the pier. Chained men, in a coarse garb of red jackets and yellow pantaloons, handle the oars, staring vacantly before them or looking gloomily on the free life displayed around.

These are galley-slaves, the prisoners of the "Bagno," of whom one sees only too many when visiting the monstrous arsenals of the French fleets; for that is their world, within the walls of which stand their prisons. There thousands of them work by the side

There thousands of them work by the side of the free laborers. With astonishment the eye follows the continual, manifold activity which is everywhere developed in the broad space; but through the noise of the ma-chines, through the din of the hammers, sounds fearfully the rattling of the chains with which the prisoners are loaded.

Truly I felt as if in another world as I, for the first time, looked in upon them. It seem-ed to me that I had been transported back two centuries to the time when Louis XIV. two centuries to the time when Louis AIV. so brilliantly governed, and Colbert his prime minister, used all possible means to create a French fleet-of-war. The galleys formed at that time the best part of every fleet in the Mediterranean. Being propelled by oars, they could sail against the wind, and were more easily and quickly managed than the clumsy sailing vessels of that time.

It was a crand sight when from the regndone as much as possible, "but one could not always have the judges in one's hand." When this means did not suffice, the innocent were next attacked, also prisoners of war, and vagationds who had been captured by the police. Now exposed to wind and weather they must perform the fearful labor

PROVIDENCE.

My Father leads me, this shall be My Father leads me, this shall be to me;
The sweetest of all thoughts to me;
Through blighting sorrow, dreary pain,
My cry to Him has not been vain;
For He has let my spirit see
That His dear hand was leading me.

In happy days of joy and light, When life was fair, and all things bright, When hope had never known decay, or golden dream had flown away How easy then it was to see That God, in love, was leading me

But when, where waters darkly flow, My trembling feet were made to go, And in their way were forced to press Upon the flowers I fain would bless, A harder thing it was to see That God, in love, was leading me.

But now I clearly see and know That every separate throb of woc, Each grief I could not understand Was but the touch of His dear hand; That, tenderly, as through the past,
Will lead me safely to the last.

— Liberal Christian.

The English Nobility Compared With their Barbarous Aucestors.

BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

I have in my own mind often indulged myself with the fancy of putting side by side with the idea of our aristocratic class, the idea of the Barbarians. The Barbarians to whom we all owe so much, and who reinrigorated and renewed our worn-out Europe, and, as is well known, eminent merits; and in this country, where we are for the most part sprung from the Barbarians, we have never had the prejudices against them which prevail among the races of Latin origin. The Barbarians brought with them that the Barbarians brought with them that stanch individualism, as the modern phrase is, and that passion for doing as one likes, for the assertion of personal liberty, which appears to Mr. Bright the central idea of English life, and of which we have, at any rate, a very rich supply. The stronghold and natural seat of this passion was in the nebles, of whom our aristocratic class are nobles, of whom our aristocratic class are the inheritors; and this class, accordingly, have signally manifested it, and have done much by their example to recommend it to the body of the nation, who already, indeed, had it in their blood.

had it in their blood.

The Barbarians, again, had the passion for field-sports; and they have handed it on to our aristocratic class, who of this passion too, as of the passion for asserting one's personal liberty, are the great natural stronghold. The care of the Barbarians for the body, and for all many exercises: the view, good looks for all manly exercises; the vigor, good looks and bright complexion, which they acquired and perpetuated in their families by these means,—all this may be observed still in our aristocratic class. The chivalry of the Bar-barians, with its characteristics of high spirit, fine manners and distinguished bearing,—what is this but the beautiful commencement of the politeness of our aristocratic class? In some Barbarian noble one would have admired, if one could have been alive to see it, the rudiments of Lord Elcho. Only, all this culture (to call it by that name) of the Barbarians was an exterior culture mainly; it consisted principally in outward gifts and graces, in looks, manners, accom-plishments, prowess; the chief inward gifts which had part in it were the most exterior, which had part in it were the most exterior, so to speak, of inward gifts, those which come nearest to outward ones; they were courage, a high spirit, self-reliance. Far within and unawakened, lay a whole range of powers of thought and feeling, to which these interesting productions of nature had, from the circumstances of their life, no access

Making allowances for the difference of the times, surely we can observe precisely the same thing in our aristocratic class. In general its culture is exterior chiefly; all the general its culture is exterior chiefly; all the exterior graces and accomplishments, and the more external of the inward virtues, seem to be principally its portion. It now, of coarse, cannot but be often in contact with those studies by which from the world of thought and feeling, true culture teaches us to fetch sweetness and light; but its hold upon these very studies appears remarkably external, and unable to exert any deep power upon its spirit. Therefore the one insufficiency which we noted in the perfect mean of this class, Lord Elcho, was an insufficiency that in these charming gifts there should perhaps be, for ideal perfection, a shade son, the wild, fitful race. All this happ

I often, therefore, when I want to distinguish clearly the aristocratic class from the Philistines proper, or middle class, name the former in my own mind, the Barbarians; and when I go through the country, and see this and that beautiful and impos-ing seat of theirs crowning the landscape. "There," I say to myself, "is a great forti-fied post of the Barbarians."

HAPPY WOMEN.

Impatient women, as you wait, In cheerful homes to-night, to hear The sound of steps that, soon or late, Shall come as music to your ear;

Forget yourselves a little while, And think in pity of the pain Of women who will never smile To hear a coming step again.

With babes that in their cradle sleep, Or cling to you in perfect trust; Think of the mothers left to weep, Their babies lying in the dust

And when the step you wait for comes. And all your world is full or regard women, safe in happy homes,

PHEBE CARY

The nettle plants, says Schleiden, are the serpents of the vegetable kingdom. The similarity between the instruments with oth produce and poison their wounds her a is very remarkable.

AN OLD WRONG RIGHTED.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST BY AUGUST BELL

CHAPTER I.

"What a gloomy old granite heap!" I said to myself, looking out of the window of my lodgings the first day of my arrival at N. I was hoping to have pleasant scenery for my daily prospect, but the green meadows and pretty streams all lay the other side of the house, while on my side there were deep, dark woods, and high hills, and from the darkest, woodiest part of all up rose the huge walls of a gray old castle. For a castle it certainly looked to be, as much as those that stand along the Rhine.

certainly looked to be, as much as those that stand along the Bhine.

"Pray tell me who lives away up in that grand, dismal place with the two towers?" I said to the resp-cheeked maid who was bringing in my tea on a tray.

"That place belongs to Doctor Barbe-Bleu," she replied, shrugging her shoulders.

"And does he live there?" I asked, in idle curiosity.

"O, yes, Madame, he lives there, he and his wife. You may see them riding by almost every day together. There they go now!" she exclaimed, stepping quickly to the window at the sound of horses hoofs.

"That is Doctor Barbe-Bleu, Madame, and that is his wife." curiosity.

I looked down, into the quiet old street, and saw the equestrians coming. The gen-tleman was a little ahead, mounted on a coal-black horse, which plunged and fretted at the tightly drawn rein. The gentleman coal-black horse, which plunged and fretted at the tightly drawn rein. The gentleman was of a stout figure, apparently full fifty years old, and he carried himself with a haughty air, his heavy black cyebrows lowering over his flashing eyes. I could imagine a scornfully curling mouth tightly set, but to imagine was all I could do, for the lower part of his face was completely hidden by the immense thick black beard which in a sort of wavy shagginess reached down to his breast. This beard was so very black that I really believe it might be said to own that rare shade called "purple-black," or "blue-black," the very intensity of jet. At my first glance, I felt a terror of the man, but an instant after, a kindly glance and gesture of his towards his wife disarmed me, and her glad, affectionate smile showed that she at least found him worthy of all love. She, the wife, was a perfect little darling of beauty, with shy merry blue eyes, and dancing curls of golden hair. Her checks were flushed pink with exercise, and she urged on her brown pony as if she did not want to be left ever so little behind. They rode by and turned into a road which led through the forest, so we lost sight of them after a moment.

"How did that pretty young creature them after a moment. them after a moment.

"How did that pretty young creature ever come to love that fierce looking man?"
I exclaimed involuntarily, moving away from the window.
"That is what every one wondered when she married him," said the maid, who had an evident acquaintance with the subject.

In fact I soon found that all the town people had their own ideas, more or less cor-rect, about Doctor Barbe-Bleu, and his charming young wife, some declaring that he led her a terrible life up in the dark stone tower, and others saying that he was only too good for such a trilling, wilful chit of a girl. Others who knew them best believed in their perfect happiness, and as I during my stay at N. learned here and there bit after bit of their history, and finally came to know the chief parties themselves, I too formed a theory of my own.

It seemed that the Barbe-Bleus were an old and wealthy family who from time immemorial had in their succeeding generamemorial had in their succeeding genera-tions occupied that great gloomy stone building, and owned the surrounding forests. In the last generation were two sons, the elder being heir to the demesnes, while the other, a youth of strange and moody temper-ament, went to far-off lands to seek name and fortune. He had a passion for medi-cine, for chemistry, for singular sciences, and ignorant folk shook their heads when they spoke of him, as if he had made a league with the devil. At last a year of pestilence swept over the country, and while the town people were dying by hundreds. upon these very studies appears remarkably pettlence swept over the country, and while external, and unable to exert any deep power upon its spirit. Therefore the one insufficiency which we noted in the perfect mean of this class, Lord Elcho, was an insufficiency of light. And owing to the same causes of light. And owing to the same causes dead so not a subtle criticism lead us to make, even on the good looks and politeness of our gloomier than ever, for there was no life aristografic class the one goal fripe general. aristocratic class, the one qualifying remark, there, the whole place waiting locked-up > one of its glass panels peered a sallow, rest-less face, and a slender little hand impa-tionly brushed the dust from the pane. That was the last that was seen of her, she never quitted the castle, but somehow a rumor crept about that the Barbe-Bleus, man and wife, lived on wretched terms, that there were violent scenes sometimes behind closed doors, and terrible bitter words. The closed doors, and terrible bitter words. The fact was, poor Doctor Barbe-Bleu had married a vixen. That was his misfortune. Socrates did the same thing. But when ere long the querulous, sickly lady died and found rest, and peace too let us hope, there were not wanting some to whisper that there had been dark work up in the drear old tower, in fact that Doctor Barbe-Bleu in the way of his profession had studied subtle poisons as well as saving remedies. How-ever that might be, he did not seem to be troubled by a guilty conscience, but held himself yet more aloof from every one, wrapped up in his deep studies and wierd experiments. Till at the end of a year, he experiments. Till at the end of a year, he suddenly left home, was gone a month, and returned with a new bride! A pale, fragile, lily-like creature she was, too frail for the bleak airs and lonely grandeur of her new home, and gently, almost reproachfully, she faded away day by day, till death claimed er also.

Then Doctor Barbe-Bleu grew more reck-frightened at her own boldness

DOCTOR BARBE-BLEU: less, more gloomy, and fiercer than ever, and more than ever the people down in the town shook their heads when his name was mentioned. But he had nothing to do with them, they were never asked to enter his door, his servants were a trained set, brought with him from abroad, as reticent as with him from abroad, as reticent as he, and so his life was absolutely a mystery to his curious neighbors. All night long they could see his light burning up in the high tower where were his library and laboratory, and there was no knowing what wicked incantations might be going on.

More dreadful than all, now and then at left in the countries of the countrie long intervals some new fair face appeared peeping from the Doctor's carriage, some new graceful figure would unawares be met new graceful figure would unawares be met in the forest paths, or some merry, trilling song be heard by passers by. At such times the Doctor would seem more like other men, would wear a less gloomy brow, ride oftener through the town on his black herse, oftener through the town on his black horse, and even sometimes be seen in the little church, the one nearest to his estates. But these times never lasted long, the fair face would disappear, the graceful form be met no more, the sweet song heard no more, and then the troubled people shook their heads and murmured under their breath that another wife had been disposed of!

"Linon my word, my dear," said the elec-

"Upon my word, my dear," said the eler-gyman's wife as she told me the story, "that poor man could not even have a week's visit poor man could not even have a week's visit from any one of his favorite cousins, (and a fine family they are, too, the Barbe-Bleus of Sussex, half a dozen girls at least.) but what when the visit ended, the whole town was agog, sure that the terrible Barbe-Bleu had made way with another wife. I do cer-tainly believe they have had him married at least seven times!"

So it went on year after year, and Doctor

So it went on year after year, and Doctor Barbe-Bleu had long left his youth behind him. Moody and irritable at times, and at times with a strange dark patience on his brow, he lived his lonely life in his ancestral brow, he lived his ionery life in his ancestral halls, seeking no friends, sought of none, but creating a world for himself in his hidden pursuits, whatever they might be. And so he might have been living even to this very day, but for the sweet faith and unsuspecting heart of little Patty Dimock, which took her straight into the lion's inws. straight into the lion's jaws.

CHAPTER II. CHAPTER II.

Mrs. Dimock, the widow of gallant Colonel Dimock, who fell in battle at the Crimea, lived with her two daughters in a pretty country-seat just on the edge of N. She had two sons besides, but they were almost always away from home, one having a commission in the navy, and the other in the army. Mrs. Dimock was a gentle, dignified lady, who wore her black gracefully, and brought up her girls unexceptionably. Anne. lady, who wore her black gracefully, and brought up her girls unexceptionably. Anne, the elder, was tall and slender, with a handsome, clear-cut face and an imperious temper; while Patty, the younger, was a happy, sunshiny girl, too heedless and impulsive sometime perhaps, but sweet and sound at heart. "Patty," said Anne, one bright summer's morning, "let us go out, and try to find some pine-cones. I certainly must get that picture-frame done for Hedley before he has his furlough!"

"With all my heart," said Patty, flinging down a dress she was trimming, "but where can we get them? Our pine-tree was stripped long ago."

ong ngo."
"We can go over in Squire Larrimer's park," answered Anne.
"But there is not a pine-tree in it," vetoed Patty, who knew all the neighbors' grounds

There is a pine on Sinclair's place, and the Brents have larches," suggested Mrs. Dimock in a languid way, looking up from her morning letters. "Oh, mamma!" exclaimed Patty, "Lillie Sinclair uses cones a great deal faster than we do; I am sure she needs all hers. And as for the Brents, we wouldn't touch theirs if they begged us to. They make such an ado over everthing."

over everything."

"Very well," said Anne in her decisive manner, "I have heard that there are pines up in the Barbe-Bleu forest, and we will go up in the Barbe-Bleu forest, and we will go there and get cones."

"Oh!" cried Patty, "suppose the terrible Barbe-Bleu himself should come out and catch us. I'm afraid to go there, Anne."

"Nonsense!" said Anne, "we shall ordy go a little way in the forest, and he never walks there. Even if he met us, he would not think of speaking to us. He never speaks to emission!"

to anybody."

Mrs. Dimock made no objection, and Patty was soon kindled to a state of high glee over the daring expedition, while Anne moved about as screnely as if she were going to church. They made a pretty picture as they started off with their baskets, Arne looking so proud and graceful, and Patty with her volumes to church. They made a pretty picture as they started off with their baskets, Arne looking so proud and graceful, and Patty with her volumes the daughter in marriage.

"I do believe the man is in love with one of us. Which can it be? Would you marry old Barbe-Bleu, Patty?"

"No, indeed!" said Patty, quickly.

But one day before long, Mrs. Dimock sought ber daughters with a grave, troubled face, an open letter in her hands.

"Dear child," he said, rather awkwardly, but that Patty did not mind, "if you should know a man.

there, the whole place waiting locked-up and descried for the return of the prodigal son, the wild, fitful Barbe-Bleu, last of his race. All this happened years and years ago.

At last he came, and set the town in an uproar, this Doctor Barbe-Bleu, physician, alchenist, astrologer, what you will. He did not come alone to his inheritance, for as his carriage drove through the town, through the undergrowth. Anne pushed one of its glass panels peered a sallow, restfarther on, and a tempting mossy path through the undergrowth. Anne pushed ahead, intent on cones, and Patty followed close behind, half-timid, half-curious. There were great oak trees, and thrifty maples, walnut trees and chestnut trees, so thickly growing that their boughs interlaced above, but not a pine in sight.

but not a pine in sight.
"I suppose the pines grow farther up," said Anne, and they followed the winding path on and on. The tall trees cut off the view so that they did not see how gradually they were drawing nearer and nearer to the old gray castle itself. But in truth it was close at hand.

close at hand.

"Oh, there are larches!" cried Patty at a sudden turn on the path, and they pressed on with new enthusiasm till at last they stood beneath the graceful green boughs loaded down with the rich brown cones.

"Delightful!" exclaimed Anne, and setting down her basket, she began rapidly to pull off the cones with her little white hands. Patty sprincipe up caught hold of one of the

Patty springing up caught hold of one of the lower boughs and drawing it down so that she could climb to a seat upon it, threw her-se if back on the little green twigs and swung there in careless content.

"Hush!" said Anne, growing pale, "I hear a footstep!"
In fact, Doctor Barbe-Bleu was just then taking his morning walk, and hearing the unaccustomed sound of that delicious laugh, he began to look to see where it came from Stooping under the low branches, and pushing through the undergrowth, his bushy black beard and frowning, shaggy eyebrows, suddenly appeared to the terrified girls, like a dreadful vignette framed in bristling laurel leaves. An instant after, he had emerged entirely, and stood there staring at them.
"We beg your parlon, sir," said Anne dis-

"We beg your pardon, sir," said Anne discreetly, "we came in search of pine-cones, and if you will let us take home what we have gathered, we will esteem it a favor."

And scarcely waiting for any answer, she took up her basket and beckoned to Patry, determined to beat a retreat as quick as possible. But Doctor Barbe-Bleu, with a gleam in his care contained. in his eyes, quickly stepped before her, and abruptly seizing her basket, said in a voice which was neither harsh nor roaring, but which was neither harm nor loaning, to really quite pleasant, "Allow me, then, young ladies, to accompany you as far as the road. There are many paths in the forest, and it is easy to se one's way."

And so the terrible Barbe-Bleu had caught And so the terrible Barbe-Bleu had caught them after all, and they found themselves perforce meekly walking along with him under the tall trees. Anne stepped on in stately silence, though her heart beat faster than usual, and Patty tripped after, quickly getting over her alarm, and enjoying the situation. In fact it struck her as so very comical, that in spite of herself she langhed again, that sweet, girlish, ringing laugh. Barbe-Bleu stopped, and bent his keen eyes upon her.

ves upon her. So it was you who laughed?" he said

"So it was you who laughed?" he said simply.

"Yes," said Patty, half-saucily, though she blushed, "I was thinking how funny it seems for us to be walking in your woods with you, and you don't cat us up!"

"Patty!" exclaimed her sister, in reproachful horror, while Barbe-Bleu frowned, but the next received her walked.

but the next moment he laughed, too, and after that there was not so much re-straint.

When they reached the road at last, where the basket was to be delivered up, Anne, in a sort of instinctive fear that he would think them two mere adventurers, said with grace-them two mere adventurers, said with grace-ful dignity,

"I am sure, sir, that our mother, Mrs.
Dimock, will feel very much obliged when we tell her of your kindness."
"Oh, said he, bluntly, yet quite as if he were pleased, "then you are the daughters of poor Colonel Dimock? He was my best friend when we were schoolboys together. He was a brave fellow!"
From that moment Patty liked him; and

He was a brave fellow!"

From that moment Patty liked him; and when with an awkward bow he plunged back into the forest, she and Anne could talk of nothing else but their odd adventure till nothing else but their odd adventure till they reached their own door. And after they went in they had to begin all over again, and tell the whole story to the wondering Mrs. Dimock.

"I remember," she said, musingly, "your father would always say there was more good in Doctor Barbe-Blen than people gave him credit for. But he is a very singular man."

Next day there were sent from the castle a basket of fresh, perfect pine cones, and another basket of delicious hot-house grapes, with a card addressed "To the daughters of my old friend."

Ah, Barbe-Bleu was a sly fox after all he knew how to send a gift so that it could not be refused. The next day more grapes not be refused. The next day more grapes came, and a profusion of lovely flowers.

"Dear me, it must be a palace of delight up there," said Anne, as she dropped grape after grape into her mouth.

"Isn't he generous!" said Patty.

The next day, Dootor Barbo-Bleu himself came, "to pay his respects to the widow of his old friend," and though Mrs. Dimock confessed that she could not understand his nature at all, still she could not done they that confessed that she could not understand his nature at all, still she could not deny that he sppeared honest and friendly. Ah, the poor Doctor! cannot you guess what had happened to him? He could not forget the two fair faces that shone upon him so sud-denly in the forest—he could not forget that sweet, ringing laugh. He wanted to hear it again, and again.

gain, and again. "Upon my word," exclaimed Anne, one day, when more japonicas and roses came;
"I do believe the man is in love with one of Mrs. Dimock looked inquiringly at her ungest daughter. Patty shrank back, and said, confusedly,

"Oh, no, mamma, I never could marry him. He is so old, and so fierce and gloomy.

And it is just like a dark prison up there!
Besides, I scarcely know him at all; and I don't want to marry him!"

"Very well," said her mother, sighing,
"I will write to him that you do not feel sufficiently acquainted with him to entertain his proposals."
"I wouldn't marry him," said Anne, "his wives disappear mysteriously, you know!"

And she laughed provokingly, while poor
Patty felt more like crying.
That evening, Patty stood sadly at the window, looking up at the forest, and the

"Suppose Barke Bleu should come and catch you," said Anne threateningly.

Patty laughed a long merry laugh that rang through the glade, and echoed over and over, making her still instantly and half-frightened at her own boldness.

"but I am sorry to have made an old friend and sorry to have made an old friend have ma

"Hush!" said Anne, growing pale, "I hear a footstep!"

In fact, Dector Barbe-Bleu was just then taking his morning walk, and hearing the maccustomed sound of that delicious laugh, be began to look to see where it came from Stooping under the low branches, and pushing through the undergrowth, his bushy black beard and frowning, shaggy eyebrows, suddenly appeared to the terrified girls, like." "You ought not to talk about him as the castle, and he will invite all the gentry about here also, and make a grand fete of it, to convince you may have thought it. There's chivalry for you, my dear; indeed, if it were not for the ghosts of the wives, I think one might really live quite comfortable with rich old Barbe-Bleu!"

"You ought not to talk about him so," said Patty, indignantly.

CHAPTER III.

CHAPTER III.

So there was a fete-day at the Barte-Bleu castle; and great was the curiosity and smothered excitement among those who so unexpectedly found themselves there. Besides the Dimocks, there were Squire Larrimer, and all his family; Lillie Sinclair, and her brother; the Brents; the Hallams; the Rector, and his wife; and a number more, comprising all in fact whose good opinion Mrs. Dimock would be likely to prize. The castle doors were thrown wide open; the rarest flowers were heaped up everywhere in such profusion that their subtle fragrance pervaded all the place; musicians were playsuch profusion that their subtle fragrance pervaded all the place; musicians were playing both in-door and out; and both the hall and the lawn before the entrance were prepared for those who chose to dance. The guests wandered up and down at their will, wondering and admiring; everywhere the noiseless servants were ready to wait upon them, and their kind host exerted himself to make the days bright one to all. For to make the day a bright one to all. For the gentlemen, there were billiard-tables and choice cigars; and the ladies were free to examine and admire the choice china and choice cigars; and the lattice were free to examine and admire the choice chins and aliver, and the costly upholstery. There were libraries full of books, there were glowing carpets softer than six inches deep of moss would have been, there were marble statues in the corners, and dainty frescoes over all the walls and ceilings, with carved work wrought by a master hand. Every few minutes, delicious iced sherbets were served to the guests wherever they might be scattered, and tiny cups of coffee with pure fragrant aroma. Then in the middle of the afternoon, there was the grand banquet to which all assembled in the spacious dininghall, and at which the host presided. The courses were magnificent, the wine most precious; and there was scarcely a person there that day who did not exty him a little too. Nothing was heard or seen of his mysterious studies and strange experiments; in fact, no one was invited to go up into the tower, but that they did not remember till tower, but that they did not remember till afterwards. Great was the curiosity felt among the guesta as to what had moved the Doctor to prepare this fete; but no one knew except himself and the Dimocks, and they except himself and the Dimocks, and they kept their own counsel.

"Patty, I'll never forgive you if you don't take him after this," whispered Anne, at every new surprise and delightful display. But Patty felt bewildered and uncomfortable—it seemed strange and unreal to her; and Dector Barbe-Bleu had bardly spoken to her gives they came. Mrs. Dimock was and Dector Barbe-Bleu had hardly spoken to her since they came. Mrs. Dimock was highly gratified by all she saw, and the Dec-tor's possessions threw such a glamor over him in her eyes, that he seemed to her as young and handsome and winning as a fairy prince. She only wished her sons were there too to see all this splender; and in her own mind she determined that Patty must never he allowed to throw such a chance away.

mind she determined that Patty must never be allowed to throw such a chance away.

"I wonder where his wives are buried," whispered Frank Sinclair to Anne Dimock, but she discreetly pursed up her pretty lips and bade him not to jest on such topics. For her part she was not at all sure that Doctor Barbe Bleu had ever been married at all. It was growing dark, and curious lauterns were hung up in the trees, and all the guests were gathered on the great stone steps before the castle to see the diplay of fireworks which was about beginning, when Doctor Barbe-Bleu came suddenly to where Patty was standing alone, and drawing her Patty was standing alone, and drawing her arm in his, led her to one of the deep al-coves in the parlor, where screened by the heavy curtains they could remain undis-turbed.

turbed.

"I hope you have had a pleasant day," he said in his abrupt manner.

"Yes, sir," answered the young girl, looking rather wearily up at a rocket.

"Does the castle seem so very gloomy now you have seen it?" he asked.

"O, no, not gloomy," said Patty, dreading what questions might come next.

"And so you don't feel acquainted with me?" was the next question.

"No, that I don't!" said Patty, glancing up for a moment in the old arch way that had charmed hims on much.

know me better, you would know a man whose life has been thwarted and darkened, a man whose heart was once warm, but it has been wounded and battered till it has grown hard in self defence, a man who feels that all his mistakes might be retrieved and his life made good and pure, if the love he seeks for should come now to bless it, if this little hand might lie in his for all the years

And having finished his speech, Barbe-Bleu waited for his answer. Patty's tender little heart was touched, and in her sweet compassion almost before she thought, she laid her small, white hand in his broad palm, and did not draw it away agnin. That night when the Dimocks reached home, Mrs. Dimock and Anne were prepared to assail Patty with a thousand arguments, entreaties, and commands, to accept the princely Barbe-Bleu. But in the very begin ning of the attack she took them completely by surprise, by quietly stating that she had already promised to become his wife.

atreacy prouised to become his wife.

The town was in a flutter. Those who were guests at the fete, applauded and congratulated; those who had not been invited, were full of dark and malicious hints, which dark outline of the tower against the moon-lit sky, when Anne came up, and in her gen-tle sarcastic voice, said, "What, moping because there will be no knowing how long liarbe-Bieu would su more grapes and roses?"

"No, indeed," replied Patty, stoutly; his wealth alone induced her to sacrifice but I am sorry to have made an old friend herself, and she would find it a dear bar-

SOCION

ding trip was completed before they arrived, than if they were only present to see her married and to say good-bye. So the objec-tions were all smoothed away, and little Patty Dimock became Doctor Barbe-Bleu's

They went off on a short pleasure-trip visiting many beautiful and renowned places, which l'atty had longed to see; but hastening through them all, by mutual con-sent, longing most for the quiet of their own castle home. It was early in the fall, when castle home. It was early in the fall, when the Barbe-Bleu travelling carriage drove rapidly through N., and Patty's weet face peeped out eagerly, nodding to every friend she saw, till they turned into the ascending road leading up to the castle. "Now we shall see, we shall see!" muttered the gossips.

CHAPTER IV.

" Mamma," said Anne Dimock at breakfast one morning, "here is a note from Patty, and she wants me to come right up to the castle to stay with her till Dector liarbelleu comes back. He is obliged to go away suddenly on business, and tells her to invite what company she pleases. I shall go of course, manua?"

go of course, mamma?"
"Of course," said Mrs. Dimock, "make haste and pack up whatever you will need. I am very glad you are going to be with Patty alone, for I long to hear from the dear child's lips whether she is perfectly happy."

"Whether in fact there is any danger of "whether in fact there is any danger of her disappearing mysteriously yet,"
Anne with a slight laugh.

Anne with a slight laugh.

"How can you say such things, Anne?"
remonstrated her mother with a shudder.
But Anne only laughed again, and went to get her clothes ready for the visit, after which she sat down to wait for the Barbe-

Blue carriage.
Doctor Barbe-Bleu's journey was indeed sudden. It was only the evening before that he had told Patty he must go, and would be detained two or three weeks perhape.

But what shall I do, all alone, dear?

and Patty with a childish pout.

"You must try to enjoy yourself, darling; invite some of your friends here, and live as happily as possible."

happily as possible."
"And you'll come back as quick as you can " she asked

Indeed I will, my pet. And now look here, for I must leave my keys with you, and you may use them to explore wherever you please. Here are the keys of the two great please. Here are the keys of the two great store-rooms; here those for the gold and silver plate which is not used every day; here the keys of my strong boxes, where I keep my gold and silver; here those of my caskets, where my jewels are; and this is the master-key to all the rooms. But this little key is to the small room at the end of the possess on the ground floor. Examine the passage on the ground floor. Examine everything, go everywhere clse, but on no account open that little room. Do not ask me why, it is for your own happiness, and it would grieve me very much if you should disregard my wishes. You must not use the little key."

Do you ferhid me, dear lord and master? asked Patty, hyung her hands foully on his broad shoulders. Barbe-Elue smiled, and then looked grave again. "Yes, dear, I forbid you," he said gently, and then he kissed her and handed her the great bunch of keys. How pretty she look-ed as she took them from him, with mock importance. It seemed to him that he had importance. It seemed to him that he man never seen her so sweet before, as now when he must leave her. She stood before him in her blue slik with boddiced waist, her golden hair half bound up and half failing loose in little curls upon her neck, the fairest creature he had ever seen, and all his

The next morning after many embraces he set out on his journey, and about an hour after that Anne came. She was all eager-ness to see the splendors of Patty's home, and Patty was glad to gratify her, so taking the keys they went from room to room. They ran through the chambers, the close is, the store-rooms, each of which seemed more gether by the bright fire, and tried to keep up each other's courage.

"My advice," said Anne, "is, that you don't tell barbe. Stendard and other chemicals which he a connoiseeur rave, exquisite statuary and bronzes. Cupids holding aloft great portfolios of engravings, caryatides supporting the marble mantels—shining mirors, in which they could see themselves full length, framed they could see themselves full length, framed to the marble mantels.

"I will get be bright fire, and tried to keep up each other's courage.

"My advice," said Anne, "is, that you of the acids and other chemicals which he never meant to use again. There they were to remain locked up, and he had never into the marble mantels—shining mirors, in which they could see themselves full length, framed to tell me about the room, all this story Doctor had then if he explains it all, I will tell him how I disobeyed." rich than the others. There were such beautiful tapestries, such stately beds, and in gold and silver. Then the great arm chairs and elegant sofas, covered with satin Anne and Patty to nestle down among their pillows for a luxurious chat.

Now let us examine the warmrones, Patty. "I have not seen them myself so they unlocked one after another, taking down and admiring all the magnificent vel-vets and stiff silks that the dead and gone ladies Barbe-Blue for generations back had rejoiced in. Anne and Party tried them on by turns, walking up and down before the tall mirrors, looking now like court-dames of the fourteenth century, and now like Queen

"My husband said I might do as I pleased with everything," said Patty, "so, sister Anne, you shall keep that black velvet dress you have on. It is so becoming, and fits as if it were made for you."

Elizabeth's Indies.

This made Anne feel highly good-natured, This made after the loging good natures, and she determined to wear the dress all day, while Patty, not to be outdone, put on a robe of beautiful shummering sea-green sile, from which her sweet face rose like the white calla hily from its shrouding green

So the day flew swiftly by, and there were many things yet to be seen which they had to postpone to the morrow. In the evening the sisters sat together in Patry's room talking over the old times and the new.

"Whoever thought it would come to this," said Patty laughing, "when we trespassed in the ferest after pine-cones.

"And how stupid we were to be afraid of Doctor Barbe-Bleu," replied Anne. "By

"I shouldn't wonder if Hedley and Guil-bert should come any day," said Anne, sud-denly remembering her brothers, "it is time for their furloughs for their furloughs."

"Oh, how splendid that will be!" ex-claimed Patty, clapping her hands. So they chatted away until late in the night, and then went to sleep with their arms around each other, just as they used to do when they were children together.

The next day they resolved to open the caskets which held the family jewels, and a fascinating treat it was. There in their soft velvet beds lay sets of turquoise, and of amethyst, rubies and great red carbuncles.

velvet beds lay sets of turquoise, and of amethyst, rubics and great red carbuncles, bracelets and wreathen work of old gold, and a full set, tiara, necklace and all, of pearls, and another of diamonds. With what ex-clamations of delight did they revel in all these treasures. But at length even that novelty became wearfsone, and in perfect satisty of luxury Patty smothered a yawn. "What does this little key belong to?"

"What does this little key belong to?" asked Anne, taking up the bunch. "Oh, that?" said Patty starting, "that belongs to a private room of my husband's which he does not wish me to open."

"Aha!" said Anne suspiciously, "now that is the very room I should want to see

"Oh, no!" replied Patty, shaking her ad, "I would not look into it for the

But for all that, an insatiable decire-began to possess her to know what the room con-tained. Why had Barbe-Bleu forbidden it! There surely could be nothing there to harm her. She might just peep in a little way, and he would never know. These thoughts kept creeping into her mind, and though she tried to forcet them, at every pause in the tried to forget them, at every pause in the conversation they would recur to her again. And there hung the little key so temptingly just where she could easily slip it off the unch, without even Anne's noticing her At last, under pretence of going to order a lunch, she slipped out of the room with the little key in her hand, and away she sped down the stairs, and through the passage, till she stood at the very threshold of the cham-ber. There, as she paused a moment, she seemed to hear her husband's grave voice as "It would grieve me if you should disregard my wishes. You must not use the littickey!"

"Ah, he is so good, and I love him dearly," she murmured, hesitating; but even as she stood there the key seemed almost of itself to turn in her hand, and the door flew so it was quite dark; but as her eyes grew accustomed to the gloom, she took two or three steps inside, and looked cautiously around. Oh, horrible! against the wall-there hung two, three, yes, seven bleached and ghastly skeletons. As she turned, in a shiver of faintness and affright, to leave the room, her trembling fingers dropped the horror seized her, and she screamed and horror seized her, and she screamed and swooned away upon the floor.

Anne heard the shrick, and running swiftly to seek her sister, found poor Patty in a bicless heap on the threshold of the lit-tle chamber. Her quick wit comprehended at once that this was the forbidden room, and hastly dragging her sister out, she picked up the key and locked the door—not however, before seeing the dreadful con-tents of the apartment. She shuddered from head to foot. head to foot

"These then," she thought in terror, 'are those former wives of Barbe-Bleu who mysteriously disappeared."

As Patty began to revive, she supported her away from the fatal spot; and once up-stairs again in their luxurious chamber, they strove to collect their thoughts. Anne whispered her dreadful doubts to Patty but Patty, though terribly shaken and nervous, would not believe one word against her

No, there is some mistake, there is some how I disobeyed."

The pale faces and cowering forms of the two sisters were but a sorry welcome to Doctor Rarbe Bleu, as he suddenly opened the door and stood before them. It seems Rarbe-Bleu told quite humbly, half-afraid that Patty even now would take a dislike to him.

"Then I should just like to know, sir, why you left the key on the bunch with all that he had been met on his journey by a messenger, who told him that the business on which he was going was already satisfactorily settled, and there would be really no need of his presence. So Doctor Barbellien joyfully retraced his way homeward, thinking, with a smile, what a pleasant surprise it would be to his little wife.

Patty lactuation

prise it would be to his little wife. He strode softly up the stairs, and along the corridor, and flinging open the door, strode into the room, his great blue-black beard roughened by the wind, and bis eyes gleaming with fun. If his wife and sister un-law looked more terrified than rejoiced at this startling arrival, he did not appear to

What a delightful surprise !" exclaimed Anne, who was first to recover composure, for she had really a fine talent for diplo-

"What a delightful surprise!" quavered Patty, like a poor little echo; but when Barbe Bleu lifted her in his strong arms and kissed her, she nestled her head down on his shoulder with a momentary feeling that here after all was her protector, and that he would take care of her. Then Anne rang for a hot supper to be brought, and they all sat down, and chatted gayly. Doctor Barbe-Bieu had also another little surprise for his wife. He had stopped a moment at her mother's door on his way to the castle, thinking perhaps Patty might be there, and Mrs. Dimock had given him a note for her daughter, which said that Hed-strange life unfolding before her, and the constant devotion of her bridegroom-elect.

Doctor Barbe-Bleu wished the marriage to take place at once; and there was really nothing to prevent, except that Patty would have liked to wait till her brothers came home on a furlough. But he told her she would see much more of them, if her wedding trip was completed before they arrived, ding trip was completed before they arrived.

the evening passed off very pleasantly after all. But the next morning a tremors revived, when Doctor Barbe-Bleu asked for his bunch of keys. After a mo-ment's hesitation, she produced them. But that terrible Barbe-Bleu raw that her hand trembled, and he at once guessed what had

How is it, my dear," he asked, very dly, "that the key of the small apart-

"How is it, my dear," he asked, very kindly, "that the key of the small apartment is not among the rest?"

Now when Anne had locked the door of that dreadful room, in her haste and trepidation she had dropped the key in her pocket, and neither she nor Patty had thought to replace it on the bunch.

"Is it not there?" replied poor Patty, as if surprised, "then I must have left it upstairs on my table."

stairs on my table

"Be so good as to get it for me then, my dear," said Barbe-Eleu, with a forced calm-ness of manner which only alarmed her the

She ran up-stairs and hurriedly told Anne what had occurred. Anne, concealing her dismay, drew the key from her pocket; when, as if to add to their uneasiness, they espied a deep, dark stain upon one side of it which neither remembered seeing when it hung upon the bunch. They dipped it in a silver bowl of water that stood near, and rubbed it with the finest soap, but all in vain, for the stain remained as visible as

Oh." said Anne, how I wish our brothers would come."

When Patty dared delay no longer, she took the key to her husband. He looked down upon her fondly as she stood before him in her pretty tremors and blushes, but after he had examined the key, his brow became troubled.

"How came this stain upon it, my love?"
he asked gravely. And Patty could only falter forth that indeed she did not know.

"Then I am afraid I can tell you," said Doctor Barbe-Bleu. "Have you not paid a visit to the forbidden chamber?"

Poor little Patty burst into tears, and linging to her husband she hid her face on his bosom, and trembling and sobbing con-fessed all that she had done. For a moment there was an onlineus silence, and then Doctor Barbe-Bleu putting her gently from him, said with a sigh:

Then I must explain it all to you, Patty, bich I never meant to have to do which I never meant to have to do. You must have thought it very singular to find such a chamber of horrors?"

"Yes," whispered Patty, shivering.
Then the honest, blundering Barbe-Bleu told her all about it. He told her how during the long years of his seclusion from the world, which had made him gloomy, moody and unsocial, he had devoted himself to the mysterious delights of his profession. to the mysterious delights of his profession, making deep researches into the unknown, poring over ancient dingy volumes of Escu-lapius and Paracelsus, up in his lonely tower. Sometimes, dipping into alchemy, he had spent whole nights watching intently the seething crucible upon the hot fire, with its costly contents. Sometimes he was wholly absorbed in studying the human frame, hoping to make some new discovery to benefit the world. And it was for this that he had procured those bleached skeletons from his old medical college, each reprefrom his old medical college, each repre-senting a different race, to assist him in his speculations. These were the pursuits he lived for, in these his very soul had been wrapped up. "Then what made you hide them in that

"Then what made you hade them in that little room?" asked Patty, who was fast re-covering her pretty, coaxing ways. So Doctor Barbe-Bleu with a penitent ca-ress told her how afraid he was that his little bride, his new-found treasure, would carn to fear him and to shrink from him if he kept up those strange pursuits after they were married; he did not wish to keep anymistake," she kept repeating over and over.
"Oh, if I had only obeyed Barbe Bleu, and never touched the hittle key!"
that these regrets came too late; and the is darling dislike to enter it, and he thought that she, so child-like and unscientific, might be nervous at night sometimes if she thing in his favorite tower that would make unhappy sisters, trembling with vague alarm as the night drew on, hovered together by the bright fire, and tried to keep uncanny things to be carried down and up each other scourage.

why you left the key on the bunch with all the rest?" she said archly, pulling his

"I was going to take it off," he replied meekly, "and then it seemed like distrusting you, so I put it back again, and asked you

Patty laughed that sweet, happy laugh, that was always music to her husband's ears. She laughed so loud that Anne, who was trembling up stairs, heard it, and gathering courage came down to see how things were going on. At the sight of her pule face, Patty laughed still more, and then suddenly controlled herself, lest Barbe-Bleu should begin to be curious and find out what dark suspicions Anne had entertained. Then Doctor Barbe-Bleu explained it all over again to Anne, and the second explanation was much easier than the first.

But what stained the after the first sensation of relief.

after the first sensation of relief.

"O, that was done by some acid," replied the Dector carelessly. "You will probably find a broken bottle that held some on the floor, if you wish to look. I remember hearing something fall as I came out the other day."

But Anne did not wish to look. She was quite content. Only she expressed a decire.

quite centent. Only she expressed a desire to visit forthwith the haunt up in the tower, where her brother-in-law had spent so many hours. So the three ran gayly up the circling stairs, reaching at last the quiet, comfortable study of Doctor Barbe-Bleu. Patty began to dust the books with a pretty, housewifely air, while Anne having looked around wifely air, while Anne having looked around sufficiently, opened a narrow door and found another tiny staircase, which she was told led out on the very top of the tower. "How splendid!" she exclaimed. "I am going right up to view the prospect, and maybe I shall see Hedley and Guilbort coming!"

coming

So up the staircase she disappeared, and Patty went on dusting books till the Doctor stopped her with a kiss.

"O, fie!" she said, shaking her curly head at him, and then she called out loudly, "Anne, sister Anne, do you see anybody coming?"

coming?"
And Anne replied, though the wind almost blew her words away, "I see nothing but the bright sun and the waving tree-tops."
"She couldn't see them if they were coming," said Barbe-Bleu.

"O, yes she could," said Patty, and she called out again, "Anne, sister Anne, do you see anybody coming?" I see," replied Anne, "a great cloud of dust moving this way."

"Is it Hedley and Guilbert," asked Patty. "Dear me, no," cried Anne, who began to be impatient, "it is only some sheep, after Barbe-Bleu and Patty laughed, and then Patty said she was afraid Anne would take cold up there in the wind, and she meant to y her down, so she called out again, Anne, sister Anne, do you see anybody ing yet? If you don't, do come down, oming yet? it is cold up there."

But Anne replied gayly,
"I see two horsemen coming up the hill.
I know it is Hedley and Guilbert, and I am going to wave my handkerchief to make

But Barbe-Bleu and Patty, when they heard that the brothers were really coming, hurried down from the tower to be ready nurried down from the tower to be ready with a welcome. They met them at the castle door, and Patty, blushing with her new honors, introduced her brothers to her husband with such a pretty air of pardonable pride that they all loved her more than ever. Then Anne too appeared, and the whole party spent a merry, happy day together, Barbe-Bleu in his hospitality treating his guests so well that his new brothers-in-law at once voted him a capital fellow and as generous as a prince.

as generous as a prince Since then there have never been any more secrets, any more doubts, but Doctor Barbe-Bleu and his beautiful little wife seem to grow more devoted to each other every day, so that after all his stormy life he is at last a perfectly happy man. He lavishes upon her everything that heart can wish, and to their stately and magnificent home their few true and tried friends are alway

But the old distrust still lurks among the town's people. You may hear it whispered as persistently as ever through all the under-currents of society. And even the simple and touching incidents which I have here related to you have been distorted by Rumor into a base calumny, which is creeping into every ear. Well might Virgil say, though centuries ago

· Fama, malum, quo non aliud velocius

Mobilitate viget, viresque acquirit eundo.' But the Barbe-Bleus hear little of all these things, and perhaps would only smile at them if they heard more. Yet it is none the less an injustice, and I, who during my sojourn at N. have so thoroughly learned the goodness and nobility of this charming pair, cannot refrain from doing what I feel to be my duty in setting forth the facts contained in this narrative. So, to the best of my small in this narrative. So, to the best of my small power at least, the old wrong shall be righted.

Food.
Bellows, in his "Philosophy of Eating,

"So perfectly ignorant are people generally of the laws of nature, that they give their pigs the food which their children need to develope muscle and brain, and give their children what their pigs need to develope fat. For example: the farmer keparates from milk the muscle-making and brain-feeding nitrates and phosphates, and gives them to his pigs in the form of butternilk, while the fattening carbonates he gives to his children in butter. He sifts out the brain and outer crust from the wheat, which contains the nitrates and phosphates, and gives them also to his pigs and cattle, while the So perfectly ignorant are people gener them also to his pigs and cattle, while the fine flour, containing little else than heating carbonates, he gives to his children. Cheese, which contains the concentrated nutriment of milk, is seldom seen on our tables, butter, which contains not a particle of food for brain or muscle, is on every table at all times of day.

"Bread, light, sweet, delicious, and emiod unbolted wheat meal with cold water, making a paste of proper consistence, which can only be determined by experiments, pouring or dropping it quickly into a heated pan—that with concave departments is best—and placing it quickly in a hot even, and baking as quickly as possible without hurn-ing. The heat of the oven and pan suddenly coagulates the gluten of the outside, which retains the steam formed within, and each particle of water being interspersed with a particle of flour, and expanded into steam, separates the particles into cells, and being retained by the gluten, which is abundant in this natural flour, till it is cooked, the mass remains porous and digestible, and, containing no carbonic acid gas, is wholesome when eaten immediately, and of course equally so on becoming cold."

M. Worms, who is playing the part of Armand Duval in the play known as Camille, at St. Petersburg, received recently a bouquet enclosing a ring, a pin, and a set of shirt buttons, of the value of four thousand dollars, with a note saying only. "To Ar-mand Duval, from his Margaret." The actor sent them back by the bearer, with the message, "I am not Armand Duval, I do not know Margaret, and I have a wife." The sender of the present was a lady of high rank, and M. Worms knew who she was.

Some five years ago, an English gen-tleman imported from England into Canada some specimens of a small yellow butterfly (Picris oloracrea.) These have propagates so rapidly that specimens were caught last year in Lewiston, Maine, and in Montpelier.

THE LADY'S FRIEND.

Splendid Inducements for 1868.

The proprietors of this "Queen of the Monthlies" innounce the following novelets for next year:-

A DEAD MAN'S RULE. By Elizabeth Proceeds, uthor of "How a Woman had Her Way," &c.
THE DEBARRY FORTUNE. By Amanda M. Douglas, author of "In Trust," "Stephen Dane, "&c. FLEEING FROM FATE By Louise Chandler

Mouiton, author of "Juno Clifford." Ac. These will be accompanied by numerous short stories, poems, &c., by Florence Percy, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, Miss Amanda M. Douglas, Miss V. F. Townsend, August Bell, Mrs. Hosmer, Frances Lee, &c., &c.

The Lady's Friend is edited by Mrs. HENRY PETERSON, and nothing but what is of a refined and elevating character is allowed entrance into its

The Fashions, Fancy Work, &c.

A Splendid double page finely colored Fashion Plate, engraved on steel, in the finest style of art, will illustrate each number. Also other engravings, illustrating the latest patterns of Dresses, Cloaks, Bonnets, Head-dresses, Fancy Work, Embroidery, &c.

BEAUTIFUL STEEL ENGRAVINGS.

The beautiful steel engravings which alorn The Lady's Friend are, we think, unequalled.

TERMS: $2.50 A YEAR.

SPLENDID PREMIUM OFFERS

We offer for THE LADY'S FRIEND precisely the same premiums (in all respects) as are offered for THE POST. The lists can be made up either of the Magazine, or of the Magazine and Paper conjointly, as may be desired.

The Terms for Clubs of THE LADY'S PRIEND are also precisely the same as for THE POST-and the Clubs also can be made up for both Magazine and Paper conjointly if desired.

The contents of The Lady's Friend and of Specimen numbers sent on receipt of 15 cts.

DEACON & PETERSON. No. 319 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

Coloring a Meerschaum.

Bayard Taylor has been visiting Ruhia, in Germany, a place remarkable for the manu-facture of meerschaums. Mr. Taylor gives the figures showing the number made, etc., and adds: You will see from these figures that only one meerschaum in ten is genuine. Nine smokers out of ten, therefore, will strain their cheeks and trouble their souls in desperate efforts to obtain a color, which, alas, they can never get. They may obtain a beautiful brown, or chocolate hues, and rejoice over them, but it will not be like the song of the finch, the realization of an established ideal.

I have heard a hundred theories in regard to the coloring of meerschaums. It should be snoked in a case—without a case—never touched with the hand—rubbed with the hand—slowly at intervals—always kept burnnand—showly at intervals—always kept burn-ing—in a still room—out of doors; in short, there is no end to the instructions. Now, either the pipe is the servant or friend of the man, or the man is the slave of the pipe, and the former relation seems to me prefer-able. Life is too short and too valuable to devote to a half inch of color, which only a few persons can appreciate.

few persons can appreciate. So I asked the manufacturers, who ought to know best, how a pipe could be most easily and successfully colored, and I give their answer for the benefit of many aspiring young Americans. "It makes little dif-ference," they said, "provided the bowl is not touched by the hand while it is warm. As a general thing, it is better not to smoke a new bowl to the bottom. The color is surer to be fine when not produced too rapid-ly, but the main thing is that the meer-schaum should cool without being touched. This is the only use of smoking with a bowl in a case; exposure to the air does no in-23" A teacher of an Episcopal school in Hartford advised his boys to sacrifice so thing during Lent. They retired, del rated, and decided to sacrifice—hash!

Unhappy couples in Canada have to advertise six months before they can obtain a divorce. Good for the newspapers, if un-pleasant for the divorces. 28" Sparta, Wisconsin, has carried off the paim for cold this winter, reaching the low-est point ever felt in the United Statesfifty-one degrees below zero. No one but a Spartan could stand that temperature.

( Texas is reported to have five million head of cattle at present, and to be perfectly willing to supply the entire country with beef and hider The daughter of a man employed on the roads near Pesth, in Hungary, and who resided in a cottage between Alt-Ofen and Uerom, has just confessed, in a fit of re-morse, that in concert with her father she had committed not less than sixteen murders during the last ten years, for the pur-pose of robbing their victims. Seven skeledets during the last ten years, for the purpose of robbing their victims. Seven skeletons had already been discovered by the authorities, and information given by the young woman had led to the finding of the nine others. Rather a left-handed illustration of the old proverb, "Murder will out."

The Newburyport (Mass.) Herald, of Wednesday, says: "On Monday our citizens

Wednesdry, says: "On Monday our citizens had a chance of seeing how things are done in New Hampshire. A candidate for office, just over the line, was here early in the norning, with a suite of twenty-two men. They were carried to the stores where caps, boots and shoes, paper collars, calico, &c., were sold, and then headed for the depot to take the 9 o'clock train, very much improved in their outward fixings, and having in their hands little presents for their wives and

LE A gentleman being asked by a clergyman why he did not attend the evening prayer meetings, said he could not leave the children. "What! have you no servants?" "Yes," he replied, "we have two servants who keep the house and board us, but we are allowed few privileges."

SOCION SECTION

Rules of City Life.

In riding in the city cars never offer your fare to the conductor till he holds his hand out for it, and that so near you that you know he will take it immediately on presentation; by this means you will save your arm much fatigue, and not have the mortification of having him refuse it until he gets ready to take it.

Have change, the exact, if possible, so as to avoid his giving you a large lot of greasy stamps, which is their invariable custom if they can do it.

they can do it.

If possible, always avoid a person who makes it a rule to occupy two seats by sitting sideways.

Never refuse a handbill or circular in the street—carry it a yard or so, then drop it. You thereby avoid being injured by a blow of the giver's hand in the breast or stomach. Many have been seriously injured by this.

Many have been seriously injured by this.

Blacking your own boots saves expenses, but more particularly the nuisance of a crowd of other professionals who flock around, asking how much the boy is getting for his job, and frowning at you if he is working under prices; doing it yourself also insures its being done well.

If you board, be strictly private in your devotions. Landladies have been known to raise on a young man caught praying loud, thinking, of course, he was a hypocrite.

Never offer to give less than you are charged in making purchases, except among strangers; acquaintances will certainly cheat you the first chance they get, to make up.

Never bet. Nine times out of ten men who offer a bet desire to take advantage of who offer a bet desire to take advantage of your ignorance in some way or other. You are sure of safety by not wagering.

Never argue. Listen to an arguer till he subsides, which will be much quicker than if you encourage him. Besides, no man who is self-willed is worth the trouble of Listen to an arguer till he convincing. Never get too close behind those gentle-men who carry canes horizontal with the sidewalk and flourish them forward and back at every step. This will prevent your eyes from being punched out, which no apology of his could restore. In riding in an omnibus, always, if pos-

THE MARKETS.

In riding in an omnibus, always, if possible, get a seat near or next to the horses. Here you are safe from the nuisance of handing up the fare for every lazy dolt, and if the day be wet, escape the drippings of all who would otherwise pass you; also the feet of all who will insist upon crowding in the stage when full. An avoidance of these makes the dust from the driver's feet bearable.

Never inquire your way of a policemanthey rarely know anything; always select a civitian who appears at leisure. Never ask a Dutchman; they will invariably make you more trouble than give assistance.

Always take an observation of the wind when passing the ash man, and act accordingly. Far-seeing is here very necessary. Dust travels fast.

Never talk polities; gentlemen never do this. Being a warm partizan on either side may affect your reputation for honesty. Politicians are generally rogues. "A man is known," etc.

Great care should be exercised in giving gratuities to chambermaids and waitresses. Presents to the children of your landlady will often be found more advantageous, and it is attended with no unpleasant suspicions. In visiting young ladies, generally take enandy. It is a capital thing to fall back on

Great care should be exercised in giving gratuities to chambermaids and waitresess. Presents to the children of your landlady will often be found more advantageous, and it is attended with no unpleasant suspicions. In visiting young ladies, generally take candy. It is a capital thing to fall back on in case of future rupture. You can then indirectly allude to your generosity.

The writer is confident that a careful reading of these rules will enable a person of ordinary good sense to adopt impromptu ones for any extraordinary occasion where his patience or pocket may be threatened.

Mourning Customs.

The ancients had queer ideas about mourning for their dead. The Egyptian women ran through the streets crying, with their bosoms exposed and their hair disordered. The Lycians regarded mourning as annually, and compelled men who went into mourning to put on female garments. In Greece, when a popular general died; the whole army cut off their hair and the manes of their horses. At the present day, the Arabian women stain their hands and feet with indigo, which they suffer to remain eight days. They also carefully abstain from milk during this time on the ground that its white color does not accord with the gloom of their minds. In China, the mourning color is white. Mournoning, the mourning color is whice. Mourning for a parent or husband is required there by law, under a penalty of sixty blows and a year's banishment. When the Emperor dies, all his subjects let their hair grow for one hundred days. In the Feejec Islands, on the texth day of the mourning the women. tenth day of the mourning, the women scourge all the men except the highest Another fashionable custom there, chiefs. Another fashionable custom there, requires the friends and relatives of the deceased to assemble on the fourth day after the funeral, and picture to themselves the amount of corruption the corpse has sustained by that time. In the Sandwich Islands, persons desirous of going into mauring, paint the lower part of their faces black, and knock out their front teeth. No dealt this causes a very supers kind of doubt this causes a very sincere kind of

Loss and Recovery of a Wedding Ring.—About three years ago, Mrs. Stewart, Montboy, while feeding her calves, allowed one of them to suck her fingers, but on with-drawing her hand beheld with consternation that her marriage ring, and another which she wore as a keeper, had disappeared, the calf having apparently swallowed them. In consequence of this the animal was kept at Montboy, where it was reared, fattened, and slaughtered recently, when a proper search was made for the missing treasure, and at the first incision made upon the intestines, both rings were found as clean and as bright were when they went a-missing three

13 It has been a time-honored precedent Massachusetts that the Chief Justice of in Massachusetts that the only outside the Supreme Court should pessess four special qualifications: He must be a Unispecial qualifications: He must be a Uni-tarian, a graduate of Harvard, a member of the Mussachusetts Historical Society, and own a lot in Mount Auburn. Judge Chap man, recently elevated to that high posi-tion, is a graduate of no college, and is with-out the other essentials. And yet the world

Hair Restoratives.

"A man becoming prematurely gray, wishes to know if the use of the so-called Restoratives are injurious, composed as they are of sugar of lead and sulphur. One physical states of sugar of lead and sulphur. sician says, No, the amount of sugar of lead is too small. Another says their use injures the sight, and eventually will bring on para-lysis of the face, and advises me 'not to use lysis of the face, and advises me 'not to use them at all; let your hair become white as snow first.' Will you decide the case, and allow me to suggest an article on this subject in your valuable journal?"

Hair Restoratives are all more or less injurious. The most successful in changing the color of the hair are usually the most injurious to the hair and scalp. Follow the advice of the last physician above mentioned and you cannot go astray.—Hereld of ed and you cannot go astray .- Herald of ago, that he attempted to write books, and people called him a fool; that he took a prominent part in politics, and they returned the same verdiet; that he undertook to uphold the American nation abroad, and he was still accused of folly. "I then turned my attention," he added, "to making money; I made it, and since no one has called me a fool." Last autumn Mr. Train attended the Jockey Club races at the Jerome Park, and Jockey Club races at the Jerome Park, and betted very freely, but always, as it happened, on the losing horse. The last day, having wagered large odds on the favorite, he again lost, and supremely disgusted, he took out his pocket-book while on the members' stand, and cried out: "I'll bet five to one I am the biggest fool in the city or county of New York." After repeating the challenge several times, a man standing on the course immediately below, looked up, and with his porte-monnaic in his hand, said. "Hallo, stranger, I'll take that bet, provided your name isn't George Francis Train."

§ "Rats cannot live in Alaska, because the holes freeze up; nor in St. Thomas, because the holes are turned wrong side out by Jockey Club races at the Jerome Park, and cause the holes are turned wrong side out by hestnut, $4,25. 6 ° Other articles same as last week.

PHILADELPHIA CATTLE, MARKETS. The supply of Berf Cattle during the past week amounted to about 1999 head. The prices realized from 1992 1995 to 20 Bb. 300 Cove brought from $40 to 70 B head. Sheep-4000 head were disposed of at from $40,85% of $2 Bb. 3000 Hogs sold at from $13 to 11,75 $\overline{g}$ 100 Be.

ESTEY'S COTTAGE ORGANS

FINEST TONE, POWER,

and it takes LESS MONEY to buy them than any other INSTRUMENT
in the market, Great inducements offered to Eunday-schools and churcher, A libe-E. M. BRUCE, Philadelphia.

18 North Seventh Stree

Husband's Calcined Magnesia

is free from unpleasant taste, and three times the strength of the common Calcined Magnesia. The N. Y. World's Fair Medal and four First Fre-mium Silver Medals have been awarded it, as being the best in the market. For sale by the draggists and country storkeepores, and by the manufacturer. THOMAS J. HUSBAND, Philadelphia.

Gift Books for Your Musical Friends.

The Home Circle, Instrumental Mosic for the The Home Circle, Instrumental Muscle for the Piano, 2 vols, Plainde's Album, a new collection of Piano Music. Silver Chord, Songs, Ballada, &c., Piano Acc. Shower of Pearls, Vocal Duets, Piano Acc. Gems of German Song, Piano Acc. Gems of Scottish Song, Piano Acc. Gems of Scottish Song, Piano Acc. Gems of Scoted Song, Piano Acc. Operate Pearls, &c., from the principal operas, Piano Acc. Price of each, plain, $2.50; cloth, $1, 101; git, $4. Sent poss-paid.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Publishers, Borton.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO., New York

THE SECOND SESSION OF LECTURES In the PHILADELPHIA UNIVERSITY OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY commences Jan. 1st, 1968. Located, NINTH AND LOCUST.—The above 1988. Located, NINTH AND LOCUST.—The above Institution has been thoroughly reorganized, and holds four sessions of lectures each year, embracing ten months of mechal instruction. Under the new organization students can enter the College at any time during its session. No previous medical study is required, as all branches of medicine are taught. It has no able corps of professors and teachers, thus furnishing familities for a regular and thorough medical and surplical education. Perpetual scholarship to the University $75 for first course, and $50 for second course students.

W. PAINE, M. D., Dean, nov80-6m UNIVERSITY BUILDING, Philads.

$100 A MONTH SALARY will be paid for Rates of Advertising.

Thirty cents a line for the first insertion. Twenty cents for each additional insertion Payment is required in advance.

The Million Disappointed Ones

Throughout the United States,

Who have been unable to hear Dickens read, can purchese as The Wonderfully Chenp Edition of Churles Dickens's Works, "at a VKRY LOW PRICE.

Send 25 cents for a copy of "Oliver Twist," as a specimen volume. It is clearly printed, on fine white paper. Sent free by mail to any address, on receipt at the price.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers, 443 and 445 Broadway, New York.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED TO SELL

THE NEW MAP.

American Republic, Mexico, West Indies, Canada, etc. Size 28 k k l, feet. It shows the Railroads and proposed Roads. It gives the population of every County in the United States. It shows the new Territories and Pacific Railroad. Combined with it is a Map showing Ruesian America, Advantic Telegraph, etc., etc. One agent, who has sold Maps for many years, writes: I am selling from 20 to 30 Maps a day, and Lean make more money on this than any other work in existence.

Sample copy, mounted on rollers, sent by Express on receipt of $2.

work in existence one mounted on rollers, remained on receipt of $2.

The largest and best assortment of Religious and Patriotic Charts published in the United States.
Send for Catalogues giving terms and full particulars. Address CAYLORD WATSON, Agents' General Depot, for Maps and Charts, 16 Beckman St., New York.

A FULL STOCK OF FRESH AND GENUINE VEGETABLE, FIELD AND FLOWER

SEEDS.

ALSO, Green House Plants, Roses, Strawberry, Rasp-berry and Blackberry Plants, Grape Vines, Asparagus and Ekubarb Rosts, GARDEN TOOLS AND BOOKS, WHOLESALE AND HETAIL.

Dreer's Garden Calendar for 1868 Contains directions for the cultivation of Seeds and Plants, with select lists, beautifully filmstrated; will be mailed to all who enclose a letter-stamp. Address

HENRY A. DREER, 714 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Several Millions of the Reading People OF THE UNITED STATES

Have never read the Waverley Novels. Allson says: "Who can read without transport his clowing description of the age of Chivairy." Jeffrey says: "They cast into the shade all con-temporary prose." Taifourd says: "He has multiplied the sources of delight to thousands." Carlyle says: "No fresher paintings of nature cau be found than in Scott.

The undersigned have just begin a new, very cheap, Bustrated edition of these works. Send for a copy of VANIOS, just published; price twenty-five cents, ent free by post on receipt of price.

D. APPLETON & Co., Publishers, 443 and 445 Broadway, New York

DR. B. FRANK. PALMER, PRES A.A.LIMB CS These inventions stand approved as the "best" by the most eminers Scientific and Suzzleal Societies of the world. the inventor having been honored with the award of FIFTY GOLD AND SHAVER
MEDALS or "FIFTS FIZES", including the OPEAT MEDALS of the WORLD'S EXHIBITIONS IN LONDON AND NEW YORK; also the most Honorary Report of the great SOCIETY OF SURGEONS OF PARIES, giving his Patents place above the ENGLISH and FRENCH.

DR. PALMER gives personal attention to the busi-ess of his profession, aided by men of the best DR. PALMER gives personal attention to the busi-ness of his profession, aided by men of the best qualifications and greatest experience. He is especially commissioned by the GOVERINMENT, and has the patronage of the prominent OFFICERS of the ARMY and NAVY. SIX MAJOR-48-NERALS and more than a thousand less distinguished officers and soldiers have worn the PALMER LIMBS on active duty, while still greater numbers of emittent civilians are, by their aid, filing important positions, and effectually conceal their mistortone.

All Genutae "PALMER LIMBS" have the name of the inventor affixed. Pumphlets, which contain the New Rules for Ampulations, and full information for persons in want of limbs, and free to applicants, by mail or otherwise.

The attention of Surgeons, Physicians, and all persons interested, is most respectfully solicited.

The well-known LINCOLN ARM is also madesolely by this Company. This Arm has the patronage of the U. S. GOVERNMENT.

To avoid the imposition of PHEATICAL COPY-ISTS, apply only to Dr. PALMER, as above directed, octor is

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE

AND

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

BY A REPUBLICAN (not a "Radical,")

This is a 12mo, containing 116 pages, and is de-voted to a calm and moderate documents of the Suf-frage Question—the author contending that the Suf-frage should be Qualized, and not Unqualified and Universal. Universal. Reasons are given against Universal Negro Suf-frage, and also against Female Soffrage.

The work will be forwarded by mail (postage pre-paid) on the receipt of the price, 50 cents, by the publishers, J. B. LIFFINCOTT & Co. p. 1913-W No. 715 Market St., Philadelphia.

SONTH SALARY with ne paragraph, male or female, in a new, pleasant business; full particulars free by return mple retailing at $4.50 for 50 cts.

DWMAN & CO., 48 Broad St., New York.

Wite or Husband. REEVES & CO., 78 Nassan St., New York.

Wite or Husband. REEVES & CO., 78 Nassan St., May York.

(Established 1861.) THE GREAT AMERICAN

Tea Company

HAVE JUST RECEIVED

TWO FULL CARGOES OF THE FINEST NEW CROP TEAS. 22,000 HALP CHESTS by ship Golden State, 13,000 HALF CHESTS by ship George Shatton.

In addition to these large eargues of Hack and Japan Feas, the Company are consumity receiving a face in some death or based on the Mississistic Company of the American and decisions of Earth, which they are solving at the following prices.

see and belong of favor, which they are selling at the following process: $4514.484 (Blacker, Sho., 60c., 70c., 60c., 60 UNPOWDER, #125, beet #1 50 # %.

Coffees Roasted and Ground Daily. GROUND COPPEE, son, 20n, 30n, 30n, near 40, per b. Hotels, Sanonia, Househot Boure & copers, and Us, and so house who have some some mise on that activite by resing our PRENCH BEES.

FANT and DINNER COPPEE, which we sail at the low price of 30n, per pound, and warrant to give perfect strategies. ow price of Die, per pound, and warrant to give perfect as including.

ROASTED UNGROUND COFFEE—De. 35c., best GREEN UNROASTED COFFEE-Pe., Se., Se.

on the transfer on save from Sta, to $1 per ib, by purchase their Teas of the GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,

Nos. 31 and 33 VESEY STREET. Post office Box, 6843 New York City.

We warrant all the goods we sell to give entire satis faction. If there are not extrahectory they can be returned at our expenses within 20 days, and have the mome refronded.

Throughour system of emplying thinks throughout the country, constituers in all parts of the United States and feed to the three size receives their Teas at the same priors with the size of provided the size of the sail to the size of the sail to the sail to the size of the sail to the

N. B.—All whitege and towns where a large number could, by clubbing beather, can reduce the cost of their feas and Coffees about one-third thereis. The Express charges), by sending directly to "The Great American Tea Company."

BeWARE of all boncorns that advertise themselves as branches of our Establishment, or copy our name wither wholly or or part, as they are beautor consistences. We have no branches, and do not, in any man, authorized to one of our name.

rigs the use of our name.

POST OFFICE orders and drafts make payable to the order of The Great American Tea Chiepers Direct atters and orders to (as below, no more, no less)

GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMP'Y, Nos. 31 and 33 VESEY ST.,

NEW YORK.

Post office Box, $643 New York City,

Petersburg, Virginia, Real Estate Agency. FRANKLIN WOOD,

Notary Public, No. 51 Sycamore Street,

Petersburg, Virginia. FARM LANDS! FARM LANDS!

I have for sale some of the most desirable tracts of iand in this section of Virginia, at pares to theore to the purchasers profitable investments. For men of limited means this is an opportunity to acquire a homestead convenient to market, and in one of the best agreement of the market of our control and one of the best agreement of the market, and in one of the best agreement of the market, and in one of the while capitalists, by purchasing at the low figures at which these iands are now held, will, in a very few years, find them doubled in value.

Investments made, titler examined, &c. All communications receive prompt attention. mar21-4:

BOOK AGENTS WANTED ---For DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.—Written by 70 of the most destinguish-col livines in Europe and America. Illustrated with over 125 Steel and Wood Energyings. In one large Octavo Volume. Prior $2.59. The ONLY EDITION FULLDRIED IN AMERICA, GONDENSED BY DR. SMITH'S

SENT FREE.

A sample of Prof. ROBES CURLIQUE will be ent free to any address. The Centagon will out be straightest hair on the first application (without nout) in soft in urnant, beautifu flowing caris. Address, with stamp, Prof. B. H. ROBE Parkings, Pale.

A GENTS WANTED EMPLOYMENT

A GENTS WANTED L-MALE OR FEMALE, everywhere, to sell the "Life of General U. N. Grants," by J. S. C. Asport. New work. "People's blitten." Price suited to the times. Address B. B. RUSSELL, Publisher, parties.

WANTED 1000 GOOD MEN as Agents for the only Genuine Improved $20 Family seeding Machine in the United States. For samples and desire to accumulate wealth, can have 12 pages (circulars addresse C. L. SIMONIES & CO. Manufacturers, Orange, Mass.)

Speak their Own Praise Wherever Planted.

If the reader of the above wishes to Tray Len driths' Seeds in comparison with the best he has ever used, and cannot conveniently obtain them from merchants or druggists of his neighborhood, a package of 50 papers, judiclously assorted, sufficient or the use of a small family, will be mailed, post-paid, and safe carriage insured, on the remittance of DAVID LANDRETH & SON,

Nos. 21 and 23 South Sixth St.

THE

Berkshire Life Insurance Co.,

PITTSFIELD, MASS.,

Offers GREATER ADVANTAGES to Policy holders than any company in this country.

SCORPORATED A. D. 1851. CHARTER PERPETUAL.

T. F. PLUNKETT, President.

BENJ. CHICKERING, Secretary. JACOB L. GREENE, Asst. Sec'y.

Dividends paid annually, on the Contribution Plan, rom 29 to 70 per cent. All the profits are divided among the Policy-holders. Dividends paid to Policy-holders this year § . F., 000. The BERKSHIKE was the FIRE COMPANY in the inited States to make ALL of its Policies NON-CORFEITABLE.

Every Policy issued by this Company since April, D. 1841, is NON-PORFESTABLE, and so expressed in the Folley.

An Annual Payment Life Polley is nor forfeited by failure to pay Fremium when due, but it is continued in force under the Massachusetts Law of April, 1861.

EXAMPLE AT AGE 85. EXAMPLE AT AGE 25.

One annual payment will continue the policy in force two years and three days.

Two annual payments will continue the policy in force four years and twelve days.

Three annual payments will continue the policy in force six years and twenty-seven days.

Four annual payments will continue the policy in force eight years and forty-six days.

Five annual payments will continue the policy in force ten years and fifty-six days.

Six annual payments will continue the policy in force twelve years and forty-one days.

Nineteen annual payments will continue the policy in force thirty years and 161 days.

All Endowment and Limited Payment Life Policies are ontified to a "Papar' PANS-POREST TABLE TOLE Y."

All Endowment and Limited Payment Life Policies, as condition to "Parity Processor as a Policy, after ose Annual Frentium has been paid.

General Agent and Attorney for Pennsylvania, 329 WALNUT St., Philodelphia, Pa. W. HARRY MILLER, Special Agent.

W. H. SMITH, M. D. Medical Examiner, feb8-ty 813 SPRUCK St., Philodelphia, Pa.

AGENTS WANTED.

BELLS.

TROY BELL FOUNDRY. CHURCH BELLS,

Chimes and Bells of all Nices for Churches, Pactories, Academies, Etcambesta, Plantations, Loomatives, &c.
Mindo of Pure Bell Metal, Made of Pure Bell Metal,

BUNG WITH PATENT ROTART POUNTINGS, THE BEST IN USE, PULLY WARRANTED.

FOR CIRCULAR ADDRESS. & CO., Tray, N. Y

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE, Magnifying 500 times, matted for 50 CENTS. THURB for $1.00. Address F. P. BOWEN, 6e17 if Box $20, Boston, Mass.

GOLD! GOLD!

My GOLDEN COMPOUND will force the bend to grow on the emouthest face, or hair on the baldset head, this k and heavy, in every case in 21 days, or money refereded. Sent by mail, posture paid, for 50 cents a package, or 31or $1. Address M. A. JAG GERS, Camour, His. marit-ti

$10 Samples free, Address A. J. FULLAM, Springsteld, Vt. mart 4.

FREE GIFTS TO ALL: A Sak Dress Pattern, a Family Sewing Machine, or Gold Watch, FREE OF COST!

For one or two days' service in any town or village, Particulars and samples sent free, by addressing, sith stamp, N. B. CLOUDMAN & CO., janus-2m No. 40 Hanover St., Boston, Mass. LABIEN AND GENTLEMEN EMPLOY-

L. E.D. Ficture business. Very profitable. No risk 8. vention specimen Pictures and Catalogues sent for 15 cents postage. MANSON LANG, 94 Columbia 8t., New York City. CURLS! CURLS! One application will enri

$25 PER DAY. Agents wanted, Male and

SOO ENCE

WIT AND HUMOR.

Warranted His Goods.

Old Adam C _____, a resident of Berks county, had a queer habit of making correct When about to sell rather an antiquated horse, he was interrogated as to the age of the beast. "Vell," he replies, "I guess about nine over ten."

In a short time the purchaser discovered the fraud, returned with the animal, and

"Mr. C , what made you cheat me in selling me this horse? Didn't you tell me he was nine or ten? and here he is:

me he was nine or ten? and here he is twenty."

"No, no; I sheats nobody. I say he is nine over ten, and he is all of dat."

At another time, when selling a balky horse, he was asked if the horse was true to pull and good to drive. Old Adam says—

"I tells you, in the morning you gets your wagon out, and puts de harness on de horse good; hitch him fore de wagon good; take up de lines and vip, and tell him go. I tells you he is right dair every time."

The buyer departed satisfied; but after following directions, he found him "right dair every time," and no amount of persuasion could induce him to change his position. Buyer of course returns the horse; but Old Adam "sheats nobody. He told him shust as it was."

Having a quantity of wood that had been to the course of the course of the property of t shust as it was."

Having a quantity of wood that had been exposed to the weather till it had become spoiled, he wished to dispose of it. Taking a load to market, customer inquires—"is it good wood? Will it split good?"

"Sphit? Yaw, sphit like a caradle."

An one who has split candles can judge

Any one who has split candles can judge how the wood split. The next time Old Adam came to market he was reproached with selling rotten wood; but "Old Adam sheats nobody; he tells him shust as it

The Disputed Poem.

Ball, of New Jersey, has a rival. Green Baize, Esq. also claims the authorship of a popular poem about which there has been much discussion, and sends us one unpub-lished stanza of the song as originally com-posed by him, to prove his right. Here it is:

Mother, dear mother, oh! give me some equille,

I have grown weary of duns and of bills; Weary of working ten hours a day, Weary of working for very small pay, Weary of trying to see my way clear, Tired of cocktails and tired of beer, Tired of dining with Parker and Mills Give me some squills, mother, give me

He appends a letter from a distinguished itizen, which he thinks will finish the consquills.

GREEN BAIZE, Esq. - Dear Sir: About the year Pol'l called at your house to grind a pair of seissors for your cook, and you took me up into the back attle to hear your beautiful poem entitled "Give Me Some Squills, Mother" I remember the year distinctly, because I fell asleep before you concluded.

Yours, truly, B. Shanks.

Get Into Your Bole.

During the "late unpleasantness," there was a cool, unquenchable sort of a Yankee, named Gunn, who ran a stage in Western Virginia over a route much infested by bush-Virginia over a route much infested by bash whackers. We frequently told Gunn that he would some day get smashed up and gobbled, and he had better give up his job, but all to no purpose, for he kept on driving stage and pocketing the greenbacks. So three of us concluded we would give him a good seare that he would accept as a warning. In coming from his stables late at night he always took a short cut across an old burying-ground. To this point we repaired. One of our number, wrapped in a sheet, by down stark and stiff on one of the sheet, by down stark and stiff on one of the newly made graves, while the others dodged behind tombstones, and impatiently awaited Gunn's arrival. Soon he came along, whistling and swinging a pair of heavy bridles, when all at once he was confronted by the counterfeit spectre. There he stood for a few moments with his arms akinbo, and coolly eyed the object from head to foot, then raising his bridles, began to give it a tremendous thrashing, bawling out at the same time, "Consarn your old pictur, what you don' out here this time of night? Get into your hole." We concluded to let Gunn alone after that. sheet, lay down stark and stiff on one of the ration at the moon, that it was made of green cheese. This she refused to admit, but he persisted in the assertion. Having been taught very early to read, she hastened to the liable as her refuge in difficulty, and erused attentively the account of the worl Returning triumphantly to the is not so, for I have read all about how God made the sun, and the moon and

Not Made of Green Cheese,

"Very well," he answered, "but does it You have no proof at all to bring in the ques-

Yes, I have, for this was in the begin ning, before any animals were made; and if there were no cows, or goats, or any milk giving creatures, how could there be

A tiond Article,

"Doctor, that ere rate-bane of yours is dirst-rate," said a Yankee to an apothecary. "Know'd it, know'd it," said the vender of drugs, evidently well pleased with the flattering remark of his customer. "Don't keep nothing but first-rate doctor stuff;

PRIMARY EDUCATION IN GERMANY.

This important fact has been quite overlooked by travellers generally

The Knowing Landlerd.

The proprietor of a hotel near Jackson is a square-built, sleepy-looking personage, with leathery flesh and an aspect of consti-tutional fatigue, but a more capable host than one would suspect. Under the mask of yawning slowness he is most alert, and has a perplexing way of popping in on his servants, when they think he is dozing be-fore the fire, with his hands in his pockets fore the fire, with his hands in his pockets and his eyes glased with an indolent film. His help are all colored. When they transgress they are dismissed summarily, and the proprietor, by going into the street, replaces them with slight trouble. The deceptive landlord received a letter from a young lady who had stopped at his house recently, in which letter she requested that her pocketbook, left behind under her pillow, should be forwarded by cypress.

which letter she requested that her pocketbook, left behind under her pillow, should be forwarded by express.

The landlord had previously heard nothing of the pocket book, but looking dreadfully sleepy he went to the colored chambermaid and said, "Pretty cold, Mandy," "Yes, sah," [A pause,] "Have to have a new broom soos, Mandy?" "Guess so—next week," [Pause again.] "Swept No. 5 yet, Mandy?" "Yes, sah," "That young lady's pocket-book, Mandy—fetch it to me"—this being drawled out in a tone of quiet indifference, but with an air of precisely knowing the history of the missing article. Mandy looked at bim with a pale face and a frightened grin. He whistled, looked at the sky and yawned. "No hurry, Mandy, fetch it to me in ten minutes, that'll do, he-i-h-o-o."
Mandy was routed. She was gone five minutes to a neighboring hut, and returned nutes to a neighboring hut, and returned with the pocket-book as she had at first found it. The landlord took it with two vawns and never a word. But when Mandy disappeared he glanced at us with a shrewd twinkle in both eyes, and said, "I under-stand 'em." He does.

Anecdote of Macready.

Some years ago, when Macready was per-forming in Chicago, he was unfortunate enough to offend one of the actors, a native enough to effend one of the actors, a native American of Western type. This person, who was east for the part of Claudius, in "Hamlet," resolved to pay off the star for many supposed offences. So, in the last scene, as Hamlet stabled the usurper, that monarch recled forward, and, after a most spasmodic finish, stretched himself out precisely in the place Hamlet required for his own death. Macready, much anneyed, whispered:

"Die further up the stage, sir!"
The monarch lay insensible. Upon which, n a still louder voice, Hamlet growled:
"Die further up the stage, sir!"
Hereupon Claudius, sitting up, observed:
"I bleeve Fu King here, and Fil die where Lucase" where I please

So the tragedy concluded.

Hair Love.

The absent daughter, married and far away, sends home a tiny curl in a letter—it is that of her first born! "The softest, A gentleman addicted to careless joking silkiest, brightest hair, she verily believes, in all the world! And its dear little head is all the world! And its dear little head is covered with it like so many rings of gold. Ah, if they could but see it!" Why, it seems but yesterday she was a child herself, the merriest of the household band—the most mischief loving, provoking, and yet fascinating being one can well magine. Threats and reproof were alike thrown away upon her; but a fend world would bring her to her mother's side in a moment, all penitence and humility, although, ten to one, the next she was as will as ever. But she became grave all of a sudden, married, and took to housekeeping by instinct as it were, for she could have had little experience in these matters; but love makes us apt scholars, and she became a very pattern wife and more all penitence is the same and she became a very pattern wife and more and sold as ever. But she became and humility, although, ten to one, the next she was as will as ever. But she became grave all of a sudden, married, and took to housekeeping by instinct as it were, for she could have had little experience in these matters; but love makes us apt scholars, and she became a very pattern wife and more described by the covered with snow a been having is a natural prelude to an abundant fruit year. The ground has been dath as it with the white of an egg, and apply it to the boots with as oft sponge. WRINKLED SILK.—To make silk which has been wrinkled and "tumbled" appear exactly like new, sponge it on the surface with a weak sclution of gum-arabic or with the white of an egg, and apply it to the boots with a soft sponge. WRINKLED SILK.—To make silk which has been wrinkled and "tumbled" appear exactly like new, sponge it on the surface with a weak sclution of gum-arabic or with the white of an edge, and apply it to the boots with a soft sponge. WRINKLED SILK.—To make silk which has been wrinkled and "tumbled" appear exactly like new, sponge it on the surface with a weak sclution of gum-arabic or with the white of an edge of the with the white of an edge of the with subtract the proved with snow and apply housekeeping by instinct as it were, for she could have had little experience in these will "shell out" better if fed with this grain.

—In Paris it was recently shown that duck rearing is nearly three times more and sale became a very pattern wife and mother. We need not say how that tiny carl will be kept and prized by the happy grandmother, who wept for joy as she remembered all this. Mindful, at the same time, with the sad experience which is the heritage of the fact that Lexingt with his dying breath that a lock of his hair may be cut off and sent in remembrance of him to his mother and dear Mary. And when it reaches them, having travelled perhaps hundreds of miles, how sacred and holy is "Another pound!" ejaculated the doctor, "said the other pound!" ejaculated the doctor, "said the other pound!" ejaculated the doctor, "Another pound!" ejaculated the doctor, "said the other pound!" ejaculated the doctor, "such a relic! We can fancy the aged most tready to start from their stears and kisses, and "his Mary" laying to her heart, and never being known that if hot ashes, containing some fire, ing it on her heart, and never being known that if hot ashes, containing some fire, are put in a wooden box or barrel containing cold ashes, although they may not come in contact with the cask, they may first set the death of a beloved object seidom fails to sanctify and make us better—to wean us bustible materials are near it.

gently from earth to Heaven; such at least, gently from earth to Heaven; such at least, is the intention of all our adherons, if we could but think so; while change and estrangement harden and petrify the affections until they seemed turned to stone? "It is a perilous thing," says Frederica Bremer, "when the beloved image in the heart of man is destroyed." The lover sends a lock of hair to his mistress, friend to friend, parent to child, child to parent. We verily parent to child, child to parent. We verily believe this same hair-love to be universal, and pregnant with a thousand romantic and touching episodes.—Fraser's Magazine.

Toil, feel, think, hope. You are sure to dream enough before you die, without making arrangements for the purpose.—

A shadow without a substance—The shadow of a doubt.

AGRICULTURAL.

Gentlemen Farmers in Prussia.

A Paris correspondent says: "Emile de Laveleye has just contributed an article in the Revue des Dex Mondes, in which an in-teresting account is given of the progress made by Prussia during sixty years of peace. made by Prussia during sixty years of peace. Writing on agriculture, he points out that nearly all the landowners cultivate their own estates; except for detached portions, reuting is the exception. They are, herefore, retained in the country by the care of their own interests, for nothing more imperiously requires the eye of the master than rural industry. It is true they are aided by a class of employes who are not found in any other country. They are educated young men belonging to families in a good position, often just leaving an agricultural college, who remain for a certain time on some large estate to initiate themselves in the practical who remain for a certain time on some large estate to initiate themselves in the practical direction of one of their own.

"The novitiate is an ancient custom still preserved in many trades. Thus frequently, the son of a hotel-keeper will not hesitate to enter another hotel as butler or waiter (Kellner) to be initiated into all the details of the service over which, one day he will of the service over which one day he will have to preside. When any one visits the farms (Rittergutter) he is astonished to see as superintendents the son of a banker, a baron, or a rich landowner. These young people drive a cart, or guide a plough. At meon they return, groom their horses, and then go and dress themselves, and dine at the owner's table, to whem they are not inferior, either in instruction, birth, or manners. Af-ter the meal they resume their working dress and resume, without any false shame, their rustic occupation. Thus we find in feudal Prussia a trait of manners suited to the democratic society of the United States, and which hereafter will become, general. In France, in England especially, a young man of the upper class would believe his dignity duck rearing is nearly three times more

-There is, with many persons, a preju-dice against white on the legs or faces of legs or faces of horses. Some one has called attention to the fact that Lexington, the most famous thoroughbred stallion, and Dexter, the fast-

Clover and Timothy.

A. Hadley, in a communication to the North-Western Farmer, gives what he regards three important reasons why clover should always be grown with timothy. First, the clover being tap-rooted penetrates deeply, stands drought, mellows the soil, and deeply, stands drought, mellows the soil, and the timothy grows much stronger and holds up the clover. Secondly, if sown for pas-turage, the timothy almost universally pre-vents the clover from swelling cattle. Thirdly, hay is too binding, especially for cattle, and clover too wasly, (succulent,) hence both together are better than either alone. To these we may add under the head of the first, that where grass councils as reof the first, that where grass comes in a ro-tation, it is of the utmost importance on a clay soil, that at least a part of this grass clay soil, that at least a part of this grass crop be clover. It will serve to mellow and loosen the heavy soil in a remarkable degree, so that when turned over with a plough, it will not only be rich, but loose and friable. If, on the other hand, timothy alone is sown, (which some do because the hay soils better,) the sod will turn over heavy and clammy, and be unfit for any crop which is to follow. The same correspondent says that he is partial to rye forcalf or sheep pasture, which he occasionally sows in the summer or autumn, after a crop of corn: and then, after being pastured winter and spring, it is turned under for a spring crop—corn, if the soil be strong enough—or it may be allowed to go to harvest. be allowed to go to harvest.

PEARS-ROOT PROPAGATION.-In a late

Van Mons, of Belgium, says:—

'I now propagate for myself and intimate friends the most choice varieties of Pears, which I obtain by means of the roots. Not a single one fails in this new process. Such roots should be selected as her cores. roots should be selected as have one or more terminal fibres, and those that are often cut off and left in the earth when a tree is transplanted, succeed well. They cannot be too small, but should not be larger than the finger. The wounds at the large ends should be covered with the same composition to protect, as in grafting. They must be set obliquely.

—The chief use of applying potash or wood ashes to the soil, is to render the silica in the earth soluble, so that it may be taken up by the plant. In most soils the soluble silicates have been taken up by successive croppings, and though there is an abundance of silica or sand in the earth, there is no alkali to unite with it, hence the advantages of wood ashes. of wood ashes.

RECEIPTS.

MATELOTE.—Take any kind of black flesh sh. Take eels and bass for instance. Cut ash. Take cers and bass for instance. Cut them in small pieces about two inches long. Put a lump of fat in a saucepan. When melted put in the fish. Add a bunch of seasoning composed of parsley, thyme and gradie.

To make it really excellent, make it three or four days before eating, and warm it every day by setting the pan in boiling water. Put a small tablespoonful of flour into the pot, gill of claret wine, and a little over a gill of broth, for a pound of fish. Also, an

CELERY SAUCE, WHITE.—Pick and wash two heads of nice white celery; cut it into pieces about an inch long; stew it in a pint of water and a teapsonful of salt, till the celery is tender; roll an ounce of butter with a tablespoonful of flour; add this to half a pint of cream, and give it a boil up.

with a tablespoonful of flour; add this to half a pint of cream, and give it a boil up.

To Cook Codfish with a Piquant Sauce.—Cut the best part of a codfish in slices, and fry them in butter a light brown color. Take them up out of the pan, and lay them upon a warm dish before the fire. Boil some ouions, cut them into slices, and put them into the same pan with the butter, adding a little vincers water and thur, and adding a little vinegar, water, and flour, and some finely-chopped resemary and parsley. Fry the onions and all the ingredients to-gether, and afterwards pour the whole over the fried fish. This dish will be excellent for three days, as it can be warmed easily for three days, as it can be warmed easily when wanted SMELTS.—Have a frying pan full of hot fat on the fire. Put a skewer through them at the gills, and lay them in the pan, half a dozen on the skewer, the ends of the skewer resting on the edge of the pan.

GINGER BISCUITS.—Rub half a pound of first half a pound of first half a skewer.

fresh but biscurrs.—Rub hair a pound of fresh butter into two pounds of fine flour, add half a pound of sifted sugar, and three ounces of pounded ginger. Beat up the yolk of three eggs, and take a little milk, with which make the above ingredients into a paste. Knead it all well together and roll it out extremely thin, then cut it into the mpromised in performing the work of a paste. Knead it all well together and ron it out extremely thin, then cut it into the form of round biscuits with a paste cutter. Bake them in a slow oven until crisp, taking care that they are a pale brown color.

To Restore the Color of Black Kide mind, anything like feminine despotism is a considerable importance, the extent of an act with its relative causes, we allow an ample margin for side winds," a London essayist observes:

To the husband of ordinary strength of mind, anything like feminine despotism is a considerable importance. The extent of an act with its relative causes, we allow an ample margin for side winds," a London essayist observes:

To the husband of ordinary strength of mind, anything like feminine despotism is

Punifying Water, —Turbid water, holding any kind of earthy substances, is rendered fit to drink in from seven to fifteen minutes, if to each liter there be added four one-hundredths of a gramme of finely powdered alum, or three-quarters of a pound to every ton of water, care being taken to agi-tate the water when the alum is introduced. COCOANUT CAKES.—Peel the cocoanut and cut into thin slices, cut these again erosaways into threads, about half an inch long; put a pound and a quarter of brown moist sugar, a teacupful of cold water, and the sliced cocoanut into a saucepan, and boil for some time over a slow fire, stirring fre-quently to prevent it burning. Wring out a coarse kitchen cloth in cold water, and lay it over a large dish; drop a tablespoonful of the mixture at intervals on the damp cloth. This is the way coconut cakes are made in Jamaica, and they are extremely nice.

THE RIDDLER.

Enigma.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

I am composed of 13 letters.

My 5, 9, 11, 6, 8, 13, is a garden plant. My 7, 3, 4, 13, is a color. My 1, 2, 12, is an agricultural tool. My 10, 6, 11, is a fish. My whole is a popular historian. G. CRESWELL. Montoursville, Lycoming Co., Pa.

Enigma.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POPT.

I am composed of 21 letters. My 19, 7, 5, 20, 11, 17, was a god of the an-

My 19, 7, 5, 20, 11, 17, was a god of the ancient Egyptians.

My 6, 16, 3, 12, is a river of Egypt.

My 7, 12, 17, 2, 7, 14, 20, 5, 17, was a celebrated king of ancient Egypt.

My 18, 21, 20, 12, was an ancient city celebrated for its commerce.

My 10, 8, 14, was worshipped by the ancient Egyptians.

My 10, 2, 1, 5, 9, 14, 15, was a city of ancient Greece.

Greece.
My 7, 2, 4, 2, 13, was an ancient Grecian philosopher.

philosopher.

My whole is very instructive and entertaining.

Charade.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

The first object on earth was I.
The second to enter Heaven.
I was placed twice in Eden with Eve,
And then into Hades was driven.

I will be to the end of time-

I'll usher eternity in; I'll be with thee in sickness and death, As in health and in life I have been

I'm stuck to the end of your nose. I'm ever before your eye.
I enter your ear, go into your head.
Now guess what I am—please try.

C. MCMULLAN.

Mathematical Problem.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

A man travelling on a road running due east, at the rate of 3 miles an hour, observed that the wind appeared to strike him from the north-east; but having occasion to stop, he found that it actually came from a point 10 degrees more to the north. Requiredthe velocity of the wind.

ARTEMAS MARTIN.
Franklin, Venango Co., Pa. ₹ An answer is requested.

Arithmetical Problem.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. If 16 rails fence a rod, how many acres in that square field of such extent that every rail will fence an acre?

J. C. PHILLIPS. Bryan, Ohio. An answer is requested.

Conundrums.

Why is a parish bell like a good story?

ns.—Because it is often toll'd.

The Why was the first day of Adam's life he longest ever known? Ans.—Because it had no Eve.

Why is the centre of a tree like a dog's tail? Ans.—Because it is farthest from the bark

(What is that which Adam never saw, never possessed, and yet gave two to each of his children? Ans.—Parents.

The Which is the most celestial part of the British Empire? Ans.—The Isle of Shree.

What does Mr. Swinburne mean by a kiss which stings? Ans .- A smack on the Answer to Last.

ENIGMA-"Oh, tell me not the woods are fair,

Now spring is on her way; Well, well, I know how brightly there In joy the young leaves play."

Side Winds at Home.

After remarking that "it is a matter of considerable importance, that, in estimating the extent of an act with its relative causes, we allow an ample margin for side winds," particularly irksome. There are weak and not wholly indifferent men who like to be hen-pecked; but, as a rule, the best hus-bands are drawn from the ranks of those who detest conjugal tyranny. But the pru-dent wife will rule her husband—be he never so strong, never so self-willed—by the happy employment of the side wind judiciously set in motion. She weans him from this pas-sion, directs him to that pursuit, controls the other failing, opens out new cares and new interests, until, like the sculptured vir-gin's foot, worn away by the kisses of innu-merable worshippers, the angularities and nodesities disappear, though every applica-tion of the smoothing process has been as soft as each adorer's kiss. The medal has its reverse, of course, and a fearful picture its reverse, of course, and a fearful picture it presents of the side wind unwisely employed—of the nagging, the taunts, the want of sympathy, the thousand and one forms of domestic misery (none of them actual of-fences, all of them nameless, indefinable acts of oppression, mere side winds of fa-tality,) which all alienate a man more and more from his home. But the former pic-ture is the pleasanter and the more profitable to dwell upon.

A Berkshire paper says that a fellow in that vicinity went courting his girl on Monday evening, and wishing to be conver-sational, observed, "The thermomokron is twen'y degrees below zelon this evenin."
"Yes," innocently replied the maiden, "such kind of birds do fly higher some seasons of the year than others.